Soviet catastrophe worst ever, officials say

Soviets seek aid in nuclear disaster | Sources say 2nd reactor in danger

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW - The Soviet Union struggled Tuesday to cope with one of history's gravest nuclear catastrophes, appealing for foreign help to fight a reactor fire and evacuating thousands of people from the imperiled countryside.

In its first report on casualties, the Soviet government said the Ukrainian nuclear plant disaster killed two people and injured an unspecified number of others.

A radioactive cloud loosed by the accident shifted, meanwhile, from Scandinavia back toward Central Poland ordered emergency measures, and European political leaders angrily demanded that Moscow explain why it did not quickly alert the rest of the world to the disaster, an apparent reactor meltdown believed to have occurred late last week.

"It shouldn't be that way in a modern society," declared Denmark's prime minister, Poul

The Soviet government claimed the "radiation situation" had been stabilized at the damaged Chernobyl plant, 450 miles southwest of Moscow. But Swedish officials said the Soviets had asked the Stockholm government for information on combating nuclear-plant fires, indicating continuing serious problems.

The official Soviet news media provided only sketchy accounts of the accident. Other reports, however, drew a picture of hurried exodus from the affected area, but seeming unconcern in the Ukrainian capital of Kiev, just 60 miles away.

A West German technician working at the Chernobyl facility said an 18-mile security zone had been established around the damaged plant, the Danish state radio reported. Truck convoys were streaming north from the area, near the Dnieper River, said Swedish radio, citing unnamed sources in the Soviet Union.

But foreigners living in Kiev said life in the city of 2.4 million people

"No one was aware of anything. No one seemed upset or concerned at all. Activity...was completely normal," U.S. Air Force Col. Robert Berls said Tuesday after arriving here from Kiev.

Western experts said serious health hazards were unlikely beyond a 30-mile range of the site.

A Soviet government statement Tuesday, distributed by the official news agency Tass, said in part: "The radiation situation at the electric power station and the adjacent territory has now been stabilized and the necessary medical aid is being given to those affected. The inhabitants of the nuclear power station's settlement and three nearby populated localities have been evacuated.

WASHINGTON - U.S. intelligence sources reported that the Chernobyl nuclear reactor complex in the Soviet Ukraine experienced a meltdown Saturday, was still billowing smoke Tuesday and threatened another reactor at the same site.

Arms control administrator Kenneth Adelman, meanwhile, told Congress that Soviet claims of only two deaths were "frankly preposterous" and called the incident "the most catastrophic nuclear disaster in history.

He said temperatures reached as high as 4,000 degrees (Centigrade, or 7,232 degrees Fahrenheit) at the graphite-cooled reactor and added, "The graphite is burning and will continue to burn for a good number

Sen. Patrick Leahy, D-Vt., vice chairman of the Senate Intelligence Committee said after a CIA briefing Tuesday, "I've seen nothing that indicates that huge numbers of people are dead. It could be two, 12 or two dozen. Certainly the blast itself would have killed anyone in the immediate area."

But Leahy said he had seen nothing to confirm a report that 2,000 people had been killed.

He said radiation from the damaged plant "continues to escape at an alarming rate...The nations around the Soviet Union are right to be very concerned"

Emerging from the CIA briefing. Sen. Malcolm Wallop, R-Wyo., told reporters, "As we understand it, the building itself was essentially destroyed...One would have to assume there is contamination flowing everywhere within that 30-kilometer radius. You've got a hot radioactive core and it's still burning."

The estimates are that the radiation levels are "100,000 to 200,000 to perhaps a million times greater than anything that was contemplated at the worst point in the appraisal of Three Mile Island," Wallop said, attributing that assertion to information he recieved from briefers.

"There are extensive levels of radiation, some of which are high enough to cause instantaneous death, some of which will cause death in

It was understood that much of the U.S. intelligence information was gathered by a spy satellite, but nobody was saying so officially.

A ranking administration official, speaking on condition of anonymity, told The Associated Press that officials evaluating recent intelligence "don't believe there was a nuclear explosion per se" at Chernobyl. "But there was clearly a meltdown.

However, a group of physicists said they did not believe a meltdown was possible.

"There was no fuel meltdown," said Allan Bromley, a physics professor at Yale. But he added, "As long as the fire continues, there will be a continued release of radiation."

As of early Tuesday morning EDT, 'smoke was still billowing from the site. The roof had been blown off and large portions of the walls (of the reactor building) had caved in," the administration official said. ## Farm group to protest professor's statements

By The Collegian Staff

An agriculture economic crisis rally, sponsored by the American Agriculture Movement, will be from 11:30 a.m. to 1 p.m. Thursday in front of the K-State Union.

"What precipitated it are some speeches Barry Flinchbaugh (professor of agriculture economics) has been making around the state," said Stephen Anderson, state spokesman for the American Agriculture Movement and farmer from Alma.

"He said in his speeches that the agriculture crisis is being exaggerated. We don't feel that way at all," Anderson said. "He's been using farm-management facts and figures and picking out certain facts saying that 70 percent of the farmers are doing quite well."

Anderson said the members of the agriculture movement believe Flinchbaugh has only been reporting the figures he chooses to report.

'We believe a person in a professional position like his should be telling the truth." Anderson said. Anderson first learned of Flinchbaugh's statements when he read about a speech the agriculture economist gave to a group in

"I'm close to Wamego and I get the Wamego Times newspaper and read about his speech," Anderson said. "I demanded time, from the group, to offer a rebuttle and they gave it to me. I found that 90 percent of those present agreed with my view."

After speaking to the group in Wamego, Anderson looked into the possibility of having a rally to refute Flinchbaugh's comments on cam-

"We've decided the rally is going to be spontaneous," he said. "We're thinking some people will get up and talk. We would like to make our way over to Waters Hall, where Flinchbaugh's office is, and picket there, but we don't know yet.

"We're trying to get him to change his views. He did hurt us in the Legislature because they used his Wamego remarks," Anderson said.

Flinchbaugh was unavailable for comment.

Environment 'corrupts' Libyan leader

Alumnus examines Khadafy's actions

By JILL LANG Collegian Reporter

Encouraging his listeners to think of Libyan leader Moammar Khadafy "as a product of his environment," Richard Parker, former U.S. ambassador to Lebanon, Algeria and Morocco and K-State alumnus, examined reasons behind Khadafy's and the United States' actions at the Pi Sigma Alpha political science banquet Tuesday.

Parker's speech, "Khadafy and Us," was an overview of the U.S. situation with Libya

"First of all, Khadafy today is perceived as our No. 1 enemy,' Parker said. "I'm not here to defend Khadafy, but to encourage you to think of him in a reasonable

Parker referred to Khadafy as a "product of his environment," born and reared among a group of people who were subject to corruption. When the revolution came in 1965, Khadafy was an unknown. Only gradually did he appear as a

Parker said Khadafy made mistakes in his political dealings with other countries, especially "He made rather an ass of himself as far as Egypt is concerned," he said. The image he developed was as a "different type of radical" with his own theory of government and disbelief in private property and private wealth. "In theory, Khadafy has no office. He's just considered a leader in his nation." Parker said. No problem would exist if Khadafy would have minded his own business, Parker said, but when he supports terrorist groups, there is no doubt the United States is involved.

Parker also discussed ways in which the United States has dealt with Khadafy.

"In 1969, the basic decision of the government was to 'walk the extra mile' and try to deal with Khadafy," Parker said. When the Reagan administration came into office two things were decided: to do something about Nicaragua, and to do something about Khadafy. "One of our problems is that we talk too much," Parker said.

Parker also discussed where the raid on Libya leaves the United States. The United States must realize that it made a violent attack on a head of state and brought harm to his family.

"This action goes against our own rules and it has made the U.S. lose some of its high moral grounds. In reality, we stooped to Khadafy's level," Parker said. "In terms of effectiveness, the action can only lead to more terrorism."

Parker also said assassinating Khadafy would not lead to a resolution of the problem.

Elimination of Khadafy or Libya will not end terrorism," he "Terrorism is an effort to draw attention. It's guerrilla warfare on a small scale and bombing is no answer to solving the problem," he One advantage of the raid might be that the United States has shown European countries it isn't afraid to take action against terrorism. Parker said the problem with plete settlement," he said. "I don't think we (the United States) have tried as hard as we should have." Parker, who is now retired, received a Distinguished Service Award from William Stamey, dean of the College of Arts and Sciences, at the banquet.

After receiving a bachelor's degree in 1947 and a master's in 1949 from K-State, Parker pursued a foreign service career which included 28 years in diplomatic posts in the Near East and North Africa.

Forces capture suspects in killings

TEL AVIV, Israel — Security forces on Tuesday captured Syrianbacked guerrillas suspected of killing a British tourist in Jerusalem and of carrying out three other shootings in the holy city, police spokesman Rafi Levi said.

The captured gang belonged to the breakaway Abu Mousa faction of the Palestine Liberation Organization, Levi said. Abu Mousa split from Yasser Arafat's mainline Fatah organization in 1983.

A Jerusalem court, without giving its reasons, clamped a news blackout on the case. Police declined to say how many members of the gang were arrested and where or how they were picked up.

But Levi said the group was responsible for four shootings, including the killings of British tourist Paul Appleby in the walled Old City on Sunday and of Israeli realtor Zehava ben Ovadia in her office overlooking the Old City on April 14.

The guerrillas also are believed to have shot an American tourist on March 7 and a West German tourist on April 16, Levi said. Both shootings occurred as the visitors were walking through the predominantly Palestinian section of the Old City, and the victims were slightly wounded, he said.

The radical Abu Nidal Palestinian splinter group issued a statement Monday in Beirut claiming responsibility for Appleby's death, saying it was in retaliation for the April 15 U.S. bombing raid on Libya. Abu Nidal is a code name for Sabry al-Banna, who broke with Arafat's Fatah and the PLO in 1974.

Royalty bury Duchess of Windsor

WINDSOR, England — The royal family buried the Duchess of Windsor Tuesday beside the king who gave up the British throne to marry her, thus honoring the American divorcee in death after shunning her in life.

Led by Queen Elizabeth II, 175 mourners ranging from royalty to the duches' faithful butler and chauffeur kneeled in prayer for the woman whose romance with King Edward VIII rocked Britain 50

The duchess, who died Thursday in Paris at age 89, was buried beside her husband in a polished oak coffin bearing a single wreath from the queen. The wreath was made of flowers freshly picked at Windsor Castle.

Missouri student shot by classmate

SENATH, Mo. — A 15-year-old student called out of his high school science class was shot to death Tuesday by a waiting schoolmate who had hidden a shotgun behind his back, authorities said.

Dunklin County Sheriff Jim Elliott said there were more than 20 students in the classroom when the shooting occurred at Senath-Hornersville High School.

"They heard the sound of the shot and the kid was blown back into the room," said school Superintendent Lawayne Law. "It's one of those deals you hear about but never dream could happen here."

Dunklin County Sheriff Jim Elliott said the 16-year-old assailant came to the room and told the teacher that fellow student Lesley Wyatt was wanted in a counselor's office. As Wyatt stepped into the doorway to leave, he was shot once in the abdomen with a blast from a 16-gauge shotgun, Elliott said.

After the shooting, the assailant walked into another classroom, gave the gun to a teacher and asked if he could "stay for a while," Law said. He was crying, Law said.

Wyatt, 15, was pronounced dead about 1½ hours later at a hospital. Authorities did not release the name of the assailant, because he is a juvenile.

Elliott said the two teen-agers had confronted each other previously, but the cause of the shooting was not known.

Dunklin County Juvenile Officer Michael Dye said the assailant was charged under juvenile delinquency laws but prosecutors could seek to try him as an adult.

Deaver's actions face investigation

WASHINGTON — Michael K. Deaver, under investigation for possibly violating conflict-of-interest laws in the 11 months since he resigned as one of President Reagan's top aides, has lobbied friends and top administration officials on behalf of his foreign clients, government records show Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III, Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, Secretary of State George Shultz and U.S. Trade Representative Clayton K. Yeutter are some of the influential people that Deaver or members of his firm have contacted on behalf of their clients.

And the clients have paid handsomely for the services of Michael K. Deaver and Associates, according to documents filed with the Justice Department for the six-month period ending March 18.

The documents, filed under the Foreign Agents Registration Act, do not make clear which employee was involved in each duty. But Deaver told a television interviewer earlier this month that some clients, such as Saudi Arabia, insisted that he handle their case exclusively.

The law provides penalties of up to two years in prison and a $10,000 fine.

Deaver received substantial fees from his clients. Canada signed a $105,000-a-year agreement and paid over $50,000 on Nov. 7 and $25,000 six weeks later. The CBI Sugar Group Inc., a consortium of Latin American and Caribbean sugar producers based in Panama City, Panama, paid Deaver $300,000 over five months, and the Royal Embassy of Saudi Arabia paid him $125,000 on Feb. 18.

Base receives astronauts' remains

DOVER AIR FORCE BASE, Del. — Seven flag-draped coffins holding the remains of the astronauts killed three months ago in the explosion of space shuttle Challenger arrived Tuesday to be prepared for burial or cremation.

Under cloudy, gray skies, nearly 150 military personnel and civilians watched as the astronauts' coffins were placed in silver hearses and taken to the base mortuary to be prepared according to their families' wishes.

The coffins arrived shortly after noon in a C-141 aircraft, which also carried the escorts and officials from the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Killed in the Jan. 28 explosion were Francis R. "Dick" Scobee, 46, the spacecraft commander; Navy Cmdr. Michael J. Smith, 40, the pilot; specialists Judith A. Resnik, 36; Ronald E. McNair, 35; and Air Force Lt. Col. Ellison S. Onizuka, 39; Gregory B. Jarvis, 42, a Hughes Aircraft engineer; and S. Christa McAuliffe, 37, a New Hampshire schoolteacher and the first private citizen in space.

Students learn through public speaking

By The Collegian Staff

Ignorance can be a dangerous thing.

In a democratic society, information is an important tool in decreasing this danger, said Phillip Anderson, temporary instructor of speech.

To combat this potential danger, Anderson requires students in his public speaking class to become aware of problems at the University and to discuss publicly these problems through the presentation of persuasive speeches.

Eight of his students did just that Tuesday afternoon in Nichols Theatre, speaking on such topics as date rape, the proposed athletic fee, advising in the College of Business Administration, smoking, and pedestrian safety at the intersection of College Heights Road and Denison

Each student in Anderson's classes is required to deliver a speech dealing with a University issue. From these speeches, each class selects two for public presentation.

The speakers chosen this semester were Jenny Langton, senior in of issues presented - ones which speech and theater education; Peter Obetz, senior in psychology; Kevin Ney, sophomore in finance; Rhonda Cummins, freshman in psychology; Martin Dannat, sophomore in business management; David Hawley, junior in journalism and mass communications; Jim Sabataka, junior in agricultural economics; and Mark McDermet, senior in journalism and mass com-

Student Senate passes allocations, discusses committee's SGA budget

By BECKY LUCAS

Collegian Reporter

Tentative allocations continued at Student Senate's meeting Tuesday with approval for honorariums, Student Governing Association, Recreational Services Council and Student Publications Inc.

The majority of the time was spent discussing Finance Committee's recommended SGA budget. The committee's total budget recommendation for SGA was $31,956.70. The original request was $33,231.70. An amendment which would have changed the amount for postage from $600 to $450 failed, as did an amendment to raise the funds in dues, memberships and clubs from $151 to $210.

Senate then approved an amendment to raise funds allocated to cover printing costs from a recommended $1,500 to $1,800.

Debate centered around the idea that senators should spread news about Senate, without excess printing charges for that purpose.

"I think that when we look at it that we're cutting everyone else, so we'd better cut ourselves," said Michelle Benoit, sophomore in agricultural economics. "I think we need to be looking at it as (if) we're cutting the whole student body because we are the student government."

Also amended from the committee's recommendations were the travel expenses. SGA had originally requested $175 and the committee's recommendation was for no funding. Debate centered around the idea that the student body president receives a salary, and his car travel expenses could come from that salary. Senate also discussed the idea that the student body president is the main ambassador for K-State and should be able to make trips out of town on University business whenever necessary.

Senate also tentatively allocated five student honorariums the recommended $4,350.

Student Publications Inc. and Recreational Services Council each received the requested amounts from line item fees. Student Publications Inc. will receive $3.20 from line assessments per full-time student and $1.15 from part-time students for an estimated total of $90,089.60. Recreational Services Council will receive $2.65 from line assessments per full-time students and $.90 per part-time students for an estimated total of $74,605.45.

Senate will continue its allocations process at 6 p.m. Thursday in the Union Big Eight Room.

Senate badgers Urban during salary debate

last week, Students' Attorney Dianne Urban requested a 9 percent increase in her salary, from $21,120 to $23,000.

After much debate, Urban was given a 4 percent raise, to $21,964.80. This increase is 1 percent higher than the increase granted to state employees by the Legislature Sunday.

It appears Senate has finally found an authority figure they can kick around. Urban was extensively questioned on her background, education and competency. One senator questioned the necessity of having a students' attorney.

Students need legal assistance.

At a Student Senate meeting Urban has helped many students with cases involving landlordtenant disputes.

Urban is the only free legal resource students have in these and other disputes. Her services are worth far more than the $23,000 she requested. In comparison, the students' attorney at the University of Kansas is paid $27,000 a year.

Urban deserves more money and more respect from Student Senate. Someone who performs such a valuable service to students should be compensated for that service and not harassed by petty questions from senators.

From the little that is known about what Radio Moscow called a "disaster," some U.S. scientists and officials have concluded that the accident at the fourreactor Chernobyl complex about 100 miles north of Kiev was a fullfledged fuel meltdown.

Hurlbert said it appears that the reactor involved in the accident had no large concrete and steel containment to prevent a release of radioactivity into the atmosphere. All U.S. nuclear power plants must have this containment structure.

Soviet officials have requested that West Germany send antiradiation experts and medicine. Requests were also made to West German and Swedish officials for

The Reagan administration has said it would be willing to respond to Soviet requests for aid. However, as of Tuesday afternoon, the Soviets had not requested such assistance.

As witnesses to Three Mile Island incident can attest, the United States has had its share of experience in dealing with nuclear accidents. If further use of nuclear power is to be successful and safe, it is important that information be shared. Cooperative efforts between the two countries could only be beneficial.

Survey notes opinion on key issues

Student Body President Steven Johnson and his cabinet would like to thank all of the students who took the time to respond to the recent Student Body President's Questionnaire. Students were asked to express their views on four campus issues and to note any concerns that they had.

The questionnaire was personally handed out to all campus living groups during the last few months. They were passed out at visitations by Steven and members of his cabinet. Student government members appreciate the warm welcome and input received at these visitations. The questionnaire was also made available at the Student Governing Association table in the Union.

The questionnaire was designed to give students the opportunity to voice their feelings about some campus issues to student government. As of Friday, 586 questionnaires had been returned. However, we will continue to receive and tabulate questionnaires.

The first question, concerning handicapped accessibility at K-State, asks, "Right now, our campus is 60 percent accessible to the handicapped. Should funds be diverted to increase accessibility?'

The survey indicated that 73 percent of the students responding are in favor of diverting

K-State orientation programs for new students was the subject of the second question. It reads, "On orientation to K-State, do you feel: a) it is adequate; b) there should be a longer program during the summer to inform students about campus life and programs: c) there should be an orientation class to introduce new students to our campus; or, d) both b and c?"

Twenty percent thought the orientation program is adequate, but more than 14 percent answered that there should be a longer summer program. Nearly 23 percent said there should be an orientation class and more than 42 percent felt that a longer summer program and class is needed.

The college ambassador program was the focus of the third question. It asks, "Should the college ambassador program be run by: a) each college; b) the University; or c) both the colleges and the University?'

Slightly more than 23 percent felt that each college should run its own program while 10 percent believe the University should run the program. Two-thirds of the respondents said both the college and the University should operate the ambassador program. The final question deals with an athletic fee. It asks students, "Should an athletic fee: a) not be considered for students; b) be instituted in an amount large enough to allow students to go to games free; or, c) be instituted in a smaller amount and reduce the price of student tickets?"

Of the students returning the questionnaire, 22 percent believe athletic fees should not be imposed on students, another 22 percent indicated the fee should be large enough to permit students to go to games free, but the remainder opted for a smaller fee and lower game prices.

The concerns noted on the back of the questionnaire covered a wide range of issues. According to the questionnaire, the two main areas of concern are campus parking and promotion of University colleges.

One issue on parking concerned the ticketing of autos after 5 p.m. when campus lighting is inadequate. Many students also felt the University does not properly promote the strengths of high-rated accounting, architecture and engineering programs. Some noted that better promotions could help student-retention efforts.

All concerns that were noted will be sent on to the University official or committee responsible for that area. This is the cabinet's policy when students voice their concerns. We encourage students to continue to keep Steven and cabinet members notified of concerns by visiting the SGA office in the

Just leave a message and any member of the cabinet would be glad to contact you. It helps to make student government more effective when the input of students is high.

Apathy, indifference reign in U.S. politics

nor from Illinois and Democratic presidential candidate in 1952 and 1956, once said, "Your public servants serve you right; indeed often they serve you better than your apathy and indifference deserve.'

Perhaps Stevenson's comment was accurate 30 years ago, an age when politicians had the best interests of the electorate in mind when they announced their candidacy, won an election and moved on to battle corruption and work for the public good.

Since then, much has happened in the last three decades to erode the compulsion to aspire to be a public servant. Today, in at least some political circles, apathy reigns. A situation in a city in Kansas provides an illuminating example of what can happen when the apathetic and indifferent are led by the apathetic and indifferent.

Last week, during a Thursday night meeting of the Overland Park City Council, Jamie Foster decided he would resign his council seat because he is getting ready to move out of the state. To Adlai Stevenson, former gover- his surprise, the other members of the council elected him mayor.

"I didn't expect that at all. I have a lot of stuff to do to get ready to move," said Foster, who has been on the City Council since 1980. He was elected by a 2-1 vote, because none of the other members of the council wanted

Foster hesitated, and tried to resign, but none of his colleagues would second the motion.

The back-door election became necessary because Joe Dennis resigned earlier this month after 21 years as mayor. Under the city charter, Council President Bill Latz would have served as mayor until the 1988 election, but Latz resigned from the council early this month.

Recent reports indicate that no one has been found to take the job. Foster still wants to move, and probably will, despite pressure from the apathetic council members to do otherwise. What would Stevenson say if he was alive today and a witness to such folly?

The ramifications of polite politics

While pondering the flurry of letters con-cerning the behavior of the "balcony protesters," during the April 14 Landon Lecture by Secretary of State George Shultz, I came across an article, "The Rhetoric of Confrontation." Published in 1969, it was written by Robert L. Scott and Donald K. Smith, two professors of speech at the University of Min-

I believe that what they had to say about the nature of confrontation can help shed light on the appropriateness of the balcony protesters' actions.

An alternative perspective on the protesters' actions is needed, for it is clear to me that invoking the "God of Free Speech" does not provide an easy way to judge the issues. For example, it is silly to complain that the signs somehow interfered with the "rights" of serious listeners.

The protesters made no noticeable noise, and the visual interference was fleeting. The ushers' response was far more disruptive by any measure of sight or sound.

On the other hand, the protesters' exercise of "free speech" was token at best. One can hardly make a serious case against aid to the Nicaraguan Contras with a few slogans and exclamations. But was that what the protesters were trying to do - match Shultz argument by argument? Obviously not.

I believe the best way to understand the protesters' actions is by viewing them as acts of confrontation.

Shultz was confronted with opposition during his lecture. That confrontation conveyed a symbolic message that goes beyond the context of the signs' specific message. As Marshall McLuhan, a communication theorist, said, the medium is the message. By defying the rules and "rudely" holding up signs, the protesters made it clear they were not willing to accept Shultz's speech in an attitude of "business as usual."

The key point made by Scott and Smith in their article is that "politeness" is political. In politics, to be silent is to acquiesce. Scott and Smith point out that for protesters,

EDWARD SCHIAPPA Guest Columnist

"civility and decorum serve as masks for the preservation of injustice.

Every single person in McCain Auditorium sent a message to the secretary of state that day; either of support, apathy or opposition. Even if the protesters were "rude," at least their message was unequivocal.

So what does confrontation accomplish? According to Scott and Smith, confrontation has two objectives. The first is to challenge the respectability of the "establishment," in this case, Shultz. Confrontation awakens and alerts the public by making the bland and respectable controversial.

Throughout history, protesters have turned to confrontation when faced with serious inequalities in power; particularly inequalities in media access. President Reagan's power to define issues and control the terms of public debate is well documented.

The civil disobedience associated with the civil rights movement and the anti-war movement seems at odds with our normal conceptions of the exercise of free speech, yet change would have been impossible without disrupting the decorum of the status

Scott and Smith suggest a second goal of confrontation is to provoke a response: the action is in the reaction. By provoking a repressive response, protesters thus "prove" the contention that the establishment relies on the use of power to enforce its view of world events.

Additionally, silencing the message of the protesters during the Shultz lecture under the transparent excuse of maintaining the audience's view suggests that the powers that be are not interested in a free exchange of messages - at least, not when the exchange might be covered by the media.

Assessments of the actions of the balcony protesters should focus more on the appropriateness and necessity of confrontation than the issue of free speech. Confrontation is meant to be impolite. It is meant to violate decorum. It is meant to send an unmistakable message of "No." If the balcony protesters are to be faulted, it is for their compromising civility. The protest may have been too rude for the politics of politeness, but was rather tame for the politics of con-

Twelve-year-old Jake Cody is in training for the Goodwill Games in Moscow where he will participate on July 5-20. Cody, the youngest of 14 Americans competing in the games, will run in the marathon.

Local youth to run in Moscow games

By ROXIE MCKEE Collegian Reporter

Although the farthest Jake Cody, Manhattan, has ever run is 15 miles, he looks forward to running the 26.2 mile marathon in Moscow this summer at the Goodwill Games.

"Right now I'm lifting weights and doing different conditioning drills to get in shape," Cody said.

Cody, along with 13 other young Americans (seven girls and six boys), will run side by side with young Soviets during the marathon. Rather than competing, however, they will support and encourage each other throughout the race. Fatigue and language differences should be their main obstacles.

"I'm real excited. Not many kids my age get to go to Russia - it will be neat to see how Russian kids live." Cody said.

Cody, 12, attends Manhattan Mid-dle School. He will be participating in the Goodwill Games July 5-20 and is the youngest of the 14 U.S. participants to compete in the marathon. There are five states sending youngsters to compete and Cody is the only representative from Kan-

The primary purpose of the Goodwill Games is to promote global peace through athletic competition. The United States and the Soviet Union, along with 40 other nations, will compete in an 18-sport competition that will receive more than 125 hours of worldwide television coverage. The cost of staging the games is around $81 million.

Organizers hope the Goodwill Games will promote peace, and by fundraising and educating others, will help fight world hunger and starvation.

The Manhattan Hunger Project will help sponsor Cody's trip, which will cost about $1,500.

Jake's mother, Michael Cody, said the Games are to help form a closer relationship between kids of other countries - a "long-term" commitment toward world peace.

"In a sports activity they need the support of each other. The marathon will help bring the kids closer together," she said.

Cody said his parents will not go with him, but his coach, Angela Gieber, Manhattan, will act as his chaperon. Cody said his parents are supportive of his running.

'My mom encourages me a lot, and I have a lot of friends who run,' Cody said.

Gieber has been following a training program designed by K-State head track coach Steve Miller.

"My responsibility is to make sure he (Cody) gets trained, and Steve is helping me," Gieber said.

Gieber, who works with Jake's mother as a vocational instructor at Big Lakes Developmental Center, took over as Jake's coach after his first coach had to quit.

Both Jake and his mother are active with the Manhattan Hunger Project, and are involved with the International World Runners' organiza-

Libyans face trial for planning grenade attack

By The Associated Press

ANKARA, Turkey prosecutor's indictment says a Libyan intelligence officer visited Turkey in January to scout American targets for terrorist at-Security Court prosecutor Ulku Coskun prepared the indictment, a copy of which was obtained Tuesday by The Associated Press, for the trial of five Libyans accused of planning a grenade attack on a U.S. military officers' club in Ankara.

Two of the Libyans were captured near the club before the attack could be carried out on the evening of April 18, three days after the U.S. air raids on Libya. They were carrying a bag containing six hand grenades.

The indictment said the club was chosen because it would be crowded. About 100 people were attending a wedding party that Friday night, and the prosecutor has said the explosion of just one grenade could have killed or wounded half of them.

Libyans confessed to investigators and revealed details of the plan.

It said Capt. Abdullah Mansur of Libyan intelligence visited Istanbul for about 15 days with one of the arrested Libyans "to determine loca-tions of U.S installations" and

District judge sentences Topekan for abduction of friend's children

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - A man accused with his wife of taking a Topeka woman's two children and moving with them to Arkansas was sentenced Tuesday to one to five years in prison.

Richard E. Hansen, 25, pleaded guilty March 27 to the felony charge of aggravated interference with parental custody. Misdemeanor charges of interference with custody and failure to appear in court were Hansen's wife, Diana Lynn Hansen, 23, faces trial May 21 on the felony charge of aggravated interference with parental custody and misdemeanor counts of interference with parental custody, obstructing an officer and failure to appear.

The Hansens were charged with abducting Brandy and Misty Penry, little girls for whom they had been babysitters, on Christmas Day in pizza parlor. The Hansens said they were trying to protect the girls.

Brandy and Misty, now 9 and 6 respectively, were reunited with their mother, Patricia Hester of Topeka, in late January. They had been living in Little Rock with the Hansens, who were using the names Richard and Rebecca Bailey.

The girls, who were known as Nicole and Michelle Bailey, were found after a sixth-grade student at a Little Rock elementary school attended by Brandy noticed her picture on a missing-children flyer.

Seay has restored clocks in the Riley County Courthouse and the Colonial Theater in Junction City. He also restored the double-dialed grandfather calendar clock in the K-State Union Bluemont Room.

His most unusual clock-repair job so far, he said, was to repair the clock in the courthouse in Savannah,

Seav made the long trip to Savannah eight times over a period of two years. The job was made more difficult by the fact that when the clock was electrified in 1900, the wheels, weights, connecting rods and other pieces were dropped on the floor in the clock tower, thrown between the studs in the unfinished walls, and generally disposed of in a way which was not conducive to reassembly, he Clock towers in courthouses are usually open to the elements, he said. Birds often make their nests inside the structure. Eighty years' collection of pigeon droppings doesn't make a clock tower an ideal place to work, he said.

"I had to wear a mask and gloves to protect myself from parasitic diseases that are usually present in a situation like that," Seay said. "If I did another (job like that), I would charge about five times as much money as I did." Seay said he has about 21/2 months of clock repairs and restoration to do. It's a very labor-intensive job to get old clocks back in shape.

"One reason my business is so good right now is that, all through the years. I've tried to do it the very best that I could. If I see a problem, I try to remove it. If I see some wear, I try to repair it," he said.

"There are lots of way to (repair) a clock. There is only one way that you take it down (disassemble it). You take care of every little problem as you see it," he said.

Concert to feature guest conductor

By BECKY MARTIN Collegian Reporter

"An Evening of French and Welsh Music," is the theme of tonight's performance by the Kansas Bach Choir at 8 in All-Faiths Chapel.

Roy Bohana, music director of the British Government-sponsored Welsh Arts Council, will be the guest conductor for the performance.

Bohana has been the music director for the British council for 25 years, said Rod Walker, conductor of the choir. Bohana has conducted orchestras and choirs in Britain and Europe.

Bohana has toured the United States and Canada six times in his career, Walker said. In 1975, he was made a Member of the Order of the British Empire.

"We feel most fortunate to have Bohana here. He is highly regarded for his work in Wales and Great Britain. He knows what his music is all about," Walker said.

Walker went on to say that having Bohana here reflects the choral program at K-State. Bohana is the first guest for the Kansas Bach Choir.

The 50-member choir is a community choir which includes students and faculty. The performance tonight will be the last in a series of concerts of the "panorama of contemporary music" for this spring, Walker said.

"It should be an interesting program of 20th century music. It will be very conservative," he said.

Jerry Hall, senior in music, is the accompanist for tonight's perfor-mance and Mary Ellen Sutton, associate professor of music, will be the organist.

Vocal soloists for the performance are Jennifer Edwards, assistant instructor of music; Steve Rushing, instructor of music; and Jean Sloop, professor of music.

Folklife festival to celebrate state's past Explosion

By TERESA TEMME Collegian Reporter

Past meets present this weekend in a fusion of sights, sounds, smells and tastes that tell the story of Kansas heritage. The eighth annual Kansas Folklife Festival will celebrate the 125th birthday of the state Saturday and Sunday in Ahearn Field House.

Demonstrations of traditional folk art, occupational skills, ethnic food preparation, music, dancing, games and other traditional activities found in Kansas history will carry out the theme of the festival - Kansans telling their story through music and

The event is sponsored by the Division of Continuing Education, with support from the Kansas Historical Society, the Kansas Arts Commission and the National Endowment for tivities at the festival.

The festival participants have been nominated by the Kansas State Historical Society and communities throughout the state. "The goal of the festival is to educate and entertain while preserving a wide variety of skills from Kansas folklife," said Carol Smith, festival coordinator.

Since K-State is a land-grant institution, it has a mission to educate through outreach programming, a mission which can be met by the festival, she said.

Art demonstrations of leather work, Czechoslovakian egg decorating, string instrument building, Cherokee basket making, Indian porcupine quillwork, Chinese calligraphy, pewter making and straw weaving will be some of the ac-

Bluegrass music, gospel music, folk dancing, story telling and tradi-tional contests and games such as leg races, checkers and horseshoes will provide entertainment. Two stages will be used simultaneously. One stage will feature large groups and one will feature smaller, quieter groups, said Melinda Sinn, public information coordinator for continuing educa-

"It is an informal educational festival. It tries to inspire others to learn the crafts so that they will be carried on. We lose a part of ourselves if we lose our heritage," Sinn said.

Sinn explained that the K-State Historical Society and the Kansas Arts Commission help to carry on these traditions by sponsoring a apprenticeship program funded in part by the National Endowment for the

The program provides individuals experience in folk art with the opportunity to study with a master folk artist. The purpose of the program is to encourage the continuation of the traditional art forms within communities, as well as recognize the important contributions made by the state's master folk artists toward the continuation of traditional artistic expression in Kansas, Sinn said.

There will be about 28 participants in the apprenticeship program taking part in the festival.

A 13-member advisory board for the festival was appointed this year by continuing education.

Smith said the idea for a community-based advisory board grew out of a series of community meetings held in October to discuss future arrangements of the festival. The aim of the board is to establish the festival as a Manhattan community event.

Sinn said the advisory board is focusing on the 1987 festival.

"They will be looking at this year's festival, and seeing what changes can be made for improvements next year," Sinn said.

The festival is open from 10 a.m. to 7 p.m. on Saturday and from noon to p.m. on Sunday.

With finals week approaching, students will be looking for quiet places where they can study. In order to accommodate these students, Farrell Library and the K-State Union have extended hours for the last two weeks of the Farrell Library will be open on May 4, 1 p.m. to midnight; May 5 through 10, 7:30 a.m. to midnight; May 11, 1 p.m. to midnight; May 12 through 13, 7:30 a.m. to midnight; and on May 14, 7:30 a.m. to 6 p.m.

Study areas in the Union, including the Catskeller and Catspause, will be open every day during the two weeks from 7 a.m. to 11:30 p.m.

Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said the library would not be open earlier than 1 p.m. on May 4 because there was not sufficient demand to justify opening earlier. The hours for the two weeks are longer than previous semesters, he said.

"The hours were extended into finals week this semester because people have been complaining that the library was not open long enough during finals," he said.

He said he found more people wanted to study during finals week than previously thought.

The finals week hours are not really shorter. They just correspond to when finals are finished, he said. May 14 is the last day of finals and the library is open until 6 p.m. on that FREE DELIVERY 11 a.m.-1 a.m.

Tigers edge Royals on solo home run

By The Associated Press

DETROIT - Kansas City Manager Dick Howser thinks Tiger Stadium has a lot of character, but he also feels the venerable old ballpark owes Royals' right-hander Dennis Leonard a game.

Detroit's Mike Laga lofted a seventh-inning flyball into the second deck seats that hang out over right field Tuesday night and the solo home run was the difference in a sparkling duel between Leonard and Detroit's Frank Tanana as the Tigers beat the Royals 2-1.

"I knew it was a home run," Royals' right fielder Darryl Motley said. "But if the overhang wasn't there, I would have caught it."

Laga's two-out shot - his third of the season was only the second . and last - hit off Leonard, 2-2. "I just got it up in the air," Laga said. "It was a 'Tiger Stadium home run' I guess, but that's what we needed to win the ballgame."

Howser agreed, noting the ball would have been an easy out in spacious Royals' Stadium.

"When you pitch like that, you're supposed to win," Howser said. "Leonard has been this good. He's pitched like the dickens. He's really pitched. He can't pitch any better than this.

"His ERA is under one. How can you do any better than that?" Leonard set down 17 consecutive Tigers after walking Laga to start the Detroit second. It was the only walk by Leonard, who struck out three over eight innings.

"Tanana pitched tough, too," Howser said. "He had good curves and change-ups, the stuff he throws. It was about a 2-1 game. That's what you're looking at.

Tanana, 3-1, scattered six hits, striking out eight and walking one while turning in his second complete game.

Tanana, who even with the victory is only 7-20 lifetime against the Royals, retired 13 straight after an RBI single by Darryl Motley in the Kansas City fourth.

"I made some good pitches at time, but it was a team effort," Tanana said. "I was staying away from the heart of th plate and keeping the ball in the park."

Someone said Tanana seemed to have a good change-up.

"That was probably my fastball," Tanana said, laughing, "but I'm not offended."

Larry Herndon singled in the Detroit first, was sacrificed to second by Darnell Coles and scored the unearned run when Motley, the Royal right fielder, dropped Lance Parrish's long fly against the wall for a two-base error.

"It was a tough call," Motley said. "But, I've made the play before." The Royals evened the score 1-1 in

Jayhawks' Pellock pleads innocent

PARSONS - University of Kansas basketball player Mark Pellock and his brother pleaded innocent Tuesday in Parsons Municipal Court to a charge of misdemeanor theft in connection with a stolen car battery.

Pellock, 19, a sophomore forward for the Jayhawks, was in his hometown as a volunteer for the Area 10 Kansas Special Olympics when the theft occurred April 19. His brother, James Pellock, 21, lives in Arkansas City.

A trial was scheduled for June 5. Both men are free on bond.

Bell-brother trial set for June 3

WICHITA - Wiretapped telephone conversations allegedly involving Kansas City Chiefs professional football player Mike Bell, his twin brother, Mark, and others will be admitted as evidence at the Bells' June trial on cocaine charges, a federal judge ruled Tuesday.

U.S. District Judge Sam Crow denied a motion from defense lawyers who sought to supress the conversations claiming the court order authorizing the wiretapping wasn't handled properly. Crow ruled correct procedures were followed and no valid grounds exist for denying prosecutors the use of the wiretap evidence.

Defense lawyer Mike Wilson of Wichita said the Bells won't appeal the ruling. He said the twins plan to proceed to trial on June 3 as ordered by Crow.

The Bells each are charged with attempted possession of cocaine and using a telephone to arrange alleged cocaine deals.

NFL chooses K-State's Hundley, Stone

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - K-State defensive back Barton Hundley and offensive tackle Tim Stone were selected as 10th- and 11th-round draft picks of the NFL Tuesday. Hundley was a 10th-round draft pick of the Chicago Bears and Stone, an 11th-round pick, will join the Cincinatti Bengals.

The Tampa Bay Buccaneers made Bo Jackson the No. 1 pick in the draft and made it clear they would outbid baseball for him, while other teams tried to outsmart each other with a flurry of trades.

Jackson, Auburn's Heisman Trophy-winning running back, is considered one of the best pro football prospects ever, and a pretty fair outfielder, too. The Bucs said they would match any baseball team, dollar for dollar, for his services.

Bucs president Hugh Culverhouse vowed to make him "the highestpaid draft choice in NFL history." But Jackson was noncommittal, saying he would make no decision before baseball's June 2-4 draft of college and high school players.

Jackson is a major-league prospect, but is considered by scouts in both sports a better bet for football, particularly since he would have to put in time in baseball's minor

The second pick behind Jackson also was a foregone conclusion nose tackle Tony Casillas of Oklahoma by the Atlanta Falcons. Then the Houston Oilers took quarterback Jim Everett of Purdue, perhaps with an eye toward trading $1-million-a-year incumbent Warren

Then came Alabama defensive end Jon Hand, taken by Indianapolis. The Colts had traded Monday with Dallas for quarterback Gary Hogeboom in anticipation of Everett Indianapolis' pick was followed by the first surprise. St. Louis, which wanted Hand, took linebacker Anthony Bell of Michigan State. He had been projected as a second- or third-

Then came a pair of 300-pound offensive tackles - Jim Dombrowski of Virginia, by New Orleans, and Brian Jozwiak of West Virginia, by Kansas City.

San Diego took Oklahoma State defensive tackle Leslie O'Neal and Pittsburgh followed with Temple guard John Rienstra. Philadelphia took Ohio State running back Keith Byars, Cincinnati took Washington linebacker Joe Kelly and the Detroit Lions grabbed Chuck Long of Iowa the second quarterback of the first

Then came offensive tackle James FitzPatrick of Southern Cal, by San Diego; defensive end Gerald Robinson of Auburn, by Minnesota; running back John L. Williams of Florida, by Seattle; running back Ronnie Harmon, by Buffalo, and linebacker Tim Green of Syracuse, by Atlanta. Dallas then jumped ahead of the Giants to take wide receiver Mike Sherrard of UCLA, New York grabbed Notre Dame defensive end Eric Dorsey and San Francisco traded away a pick it got from the Cowboys to take Vanderbilt offensive lineman Will Wolford.

Then it was Tennessee wide receiver Tim McGee, to Cincinnati; unsung offensive tackle Mike Haight. to the New York Jets, and offensive lineman Mike Schad of Queen's University in Toronto, to the Los Angeles Rams the first Canadian college player ever taken in the first rouna.

The Raiders took little-known defensive end Bob Buczkowski of Pitt. Tampa Bay chose cornerback Roderick Jones of SMU, and the Super Bowl teams ended the first round with running backs - SMU's Reggie Dupard to the New England Patriots and Florida's Neal Anderson to the Chicago Bears.

Chiefs nab offensive tackle with first selection

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The Kansas City Chiefs answered owner Lamar Hunt's challenge to improve by taking 1,056 pounds worth of linemen Tuesday on their first four picks in the college draft.

The Chiefs, locked out of the National Football League playoffs since 1971 and under pressure from their owner to show immediate improvement, had the seventh choice in the first round and took Brian Jozwiak, an offensive tackle from West Virginia. Jozwiak stands 6-foot-5 and weighs between 305 and 310 pounds depending on how recently he ate his last meal.

Round two saw the Chiefs reach into little-noticed Appalachian State for a hefty linebacker named Barry 'Dino" Hackett, 6-3, 220.

The third round choice in the long, drawn-out draft day was used for defensive end Leonard Griffin, 6-4, 252, of Grambling.

With two picks in the fourth round. the Chiefs took Tom Baugh, a 6-3, 274-pound center from Southern Il-180-pound wide receiver from Furman.

Les Miller, Chiefs' personnel director, described Jozwiak as a "man mountain type of offensive tackle" who will probably be a first-year

"We film-graded his entire senior year and we kept grading him in the 85 percent area no matter which game we watched," Miller said of the consensus all-American. "We didn't see any type of lessening of productivity by him in his senior linois and Charles Fox, a 5-11, year. Going into the draft, this is the guy we were going to take if nothing else happened and he was available.

Jozwiak, contacted by phone from West Virginia, said he was 'speechless' at being the Chiefs' first-round choice.

"I'm ready. I'm ready. I'm very, very excited to be a Kansas City Chief. I'm speechless, I really am," he said. "I didn't know where I was going to end up, the draft is so unpredictable. But I am very honored and very proud."

City crimes include damage to property

Since March, there have been various crimes committed against private residents, the city and the Riley County Police Department.

The majority of these incidents are probably connected. In one incident, the traffic signal lights were stolen from the intersection of 17th and Leavenworth streets and have yet to be recovered. There are more than 12 incidents of criminal damage to property where vehicles' exterior mirrors and windows were smashed throughout the city for no apparent reason.

RCPD also reports more than six cases involving the theft of street signs - including Neighborhood Watch signs have occurred.

Utility company needs $21.2 million

KPL officials request increase in rates

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Officials of KPL Gas Service Co. on Tuesday told state utility regulators the company needs $21.2 million in higher rates to compensate for inflation since its last rate increase in 1984.

And William E. Wall, chairman of the state's largest natural gas utility, told the Kansas Corporation Commission that his company is raising rates to residential and small commercial customers in a move to reflect actual costs of service.

"We're asking residential ratepayers and small commercial customers to pay what it costs to provide service," Wall said in testimony before the commission. "It's been in malproportion in the past. This is a step toward cost based service."

Wall was the first witness to testify in corporation commission hearings on the company's request for $21.2 million in higher rates for its 550,000 natural gas customers in the state.

The increases would be about the same for the KPL main line system. which serves 110,000 customers in 106 cities including Manhattan, Abilene, Salina and Great Bend.

In the main system, the increases would be 7.4 percent for residential and small commercial customers. causing a $3.35 monthly rate increase. The increase would be 3.84 percent for large commercial customers while rates would drop .9 percent for large indistrial users and drop 2.01 percent for large volume industrial customers.

The average increase for residential and small commercial customers would be 7.12 percent, or about a $3 increase on average monthly bills. The increase in rates for large commercial and large industrial users would range from 1.22 percent to 1.48 percent. Large volume industrial customers would see a 6.58 percent drop in rates under the eastern two-thirds of the state and 420,000 customers in Gas Service's former territory and on KPL's 'B" system. Those towns in this category include Kansas City, Kan., Wichita, Topeka and Overland Park.

Wall said KPL Gas Service no longer wants its industrial and commercial rates to subsidize residential and small commercial rates. He said increased competition for large industrial customers has forced the company to move toward more 'cost-based rates" to protect its rate

"It's not feasible to (implement cost-based rates) in one fell swoop," Wall said in cross examination scheduled hearings to begin April 29 on KPL Gas Service Co.'s request for $21.2 million in higher rates for its 550,000 natural gas customers in the

A major issue to develop during the first day is a fight between KPL and Kansas Pipeline, which wants to dramatic for the 231 communities in sell natural gas from Kansas wells to industries in the Kansas City area. The pipeline company bought 270 miles of pipeline, covering 70 miles in eastern Kansas, after the Phillips Petroleum Co., closed its large refinery in Kansas City's Fairfax Industrial District. However, Kansas Pipeline needs cooperation from KPL to transport its gas to the metropolitan area and claims the utility has refused. The pipeline asked the commission to force KPL to buy and carry its locally produced gas. 'Kansas Pipeline received a commitment from KPL to transport gas for Kansas Pipeline and to consider purchase of its Kansas-produced gas," said James ZaKoura, the Kansas City attorney representing the pipeline company. "Kansas Pipeline bet $8 million KPL would honor that commitment but they have failed to

Candidates for House positions file for primary elections

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - As the 1986 Legislature drew to a close early this week, 45 candidates for House seats including the entire Sedgwick County Republican delegation - filed documents to get their names on the August primary ballot.

The filings began to pour in at the secretary of state's office when the Legislature convened for the brief wrap-up session last Wednesday and continued until most lawmakers left Topeka on Monday. The most filings occurred on Wednesday and Friday, when 12 candidates signed necessary documents each day.

The seven Sedgwick County Republican lawmakers aimed at making a public display of their filing when they marched from the House chamber to the secretary of state's office during the noon hour on Thursday.

Agencies request city funds

By SUE DAWSON Collegian Reporter

Representatives from various social service agencies pled their case for funding from the Manhattan City Commission Tuesday afternoon.

Commissioners heard presentations from 13 organizations seeking a share of $1.5 million the city has committed to fund social services.

Agencies were urged by Mayor Rick Mann to "come tell us about yourself," although the Commission was not discussing or allocating funds during the work session.

"Today is a background information of knowledge so we can make a better decision in the future," Mann

"Hopefully, the two of us can get together and work as an organization," said Pat Benson of the Riley County Council of Social Agencies.

Big Brothers/Big Sisters of Manhattan requested $39,485, a decrease from the budgeted $47,285 for 1986. Vice President John Hensley said the agency is promoting cutbacks by recruiting sociology students from the University and showing a willingness to share facilities with another organization. Dennis Mullin, president of the Flint Hills Bread Basket, said the organization delivered 98 percent more food than in 1985 and asked for an allocation of $2,500. He also said his agency would be willing to share facilities with several groups.

"You can better coordinate if you don't have to go all over the community" to get services for the needy, Mullin said.

Three University for Man groups requested funding: Appropriate Technology, $4,702; Community Gardens, $672; and Home, $27,694.

The Appropriate Technology request was a decrease from the 1986 budget of $11,936. Director Bob Habiger said this was due to the agency becoming more selfsufficient and receiving other sources of funding.

Other groups requesting funds, and the amount sought, include:

- Crisis Center: $40,000. Emergency Shelter: $8,500. - Energy Assistance Program:

Family Council: $2,400 for funding of the Parents Anonymous pro-Douglass Center Fellowship

Meals: $2,000. - Riley County Home Health Services: $16,000. Manhattan Day Care Center:

- The Taxi Service: $43,000. Commissioner Gene Klingler said he was concerned with the amount of aid given to people outside the city limits.

"I'm looking very closely at protecting our own citizens in the city."

Nuclear facility safe, officials say

From Staff and Wire Reports

Kansas' only nuclear generating facility, the Wolf Creek plant near Burlington, is as safe as can be built and an accident similar to that in the Soviet Union is inconceivable, officials said Tuesday.

Nevertheless, critics said they believe "it can happen here." Spokesmen for Kansas Gas & Electric Co. of Wichita, lead utility in the construction of Wolf Creek, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, the Kansas Corporation Commission and the nuclear engineering department at K-State said Wolf Creek is a "state of the art" plant with basic technological differences from Soviet plants. However, three people who have led efforts to scuttle the Wolf Creek project say older U.S. nuclear plants built with "state of the art" technology before Wolf Creek have had accidents, and U.S. Rep. Dan Glickman, D-Wichita, said he doesn't trust the NRC to know which plants are safe and which are not.

"The NRC is a pretty weak watchdog," Glickman said. "I don't think there is a smoking gun or anything, but I do have some concerns about safety at that plant and at nuclear plants all over the country, given the fact that I think the nuclear regulation."

News of the trouble at Russia's Chernobyl plant rekindled the controversy over Wolf Creek which has raged for more than a decade.

A spokesman for the NRC in its regional office at Arlington, Texas, defended safety features of the Wolf Creek plant in telephone interviews.

"It's as safe as we can build them," said Clyde E. Wisner, one of the NRC spokesmen. "Given the design of the reactors, safety systems and backup systems, it is hard to conceive we could have any accident like apparently happened in the Soviet Union. I just don't believe we could have anything of that magnitude. "With these kinds of safety features, it's hard to conceive we'd have an accident of such farreaching effects" as the Soviet problem. Wisner said. Gary Haden, director of research for the Kansas Corporation Commission, said the dome is what makes the U.S. plants safer than those of Russia, because it would prevent the sudden escape of radiation. KCC Chairman Michael Lennen said the Soviet experience "underscores the need and importance of safety in the design and construction of nuclear power plants."

N. Dean Eckhoff, K-State professor of nuclear engineering, said sketchy news accounts indicated to him the Russian reactor either had a graphite fire or perhaps a graphite explosion.

He said the explosion "could well have been" from graphite, but "I'd rather opt for a chemical explosion, probably due to the graphite itself.

"I'm not sure of what the initiating action might have been," Eckhoff said. He said "it's not the type incident I would expect there...(it's) not totally logical to me."

He said that from television accounts he had seen, there was "no oxygen present. So I don't know how you'd get graphite to burn."

Eckhoff said such a situation could be avoided "by just maintaining surveillance and proper temperatures."

Eckhoff said carbon dioxide should be used to fight a graphite fire, and admitted he was puzzled why the Soviets sought technical assistance from other countries on how to extinguish the fire.

"It's probably that they have too high a radiation level to get close to it," he said. "Maybe the lack of experience in fighting a fire that involves a lot of radioactivity is why they sought advice."

ELIGIBILITY FOR CARE AT LAFENE STUDENT HEALTH CENTER

1. Health fees are established upon the recommendation of the Student Senate with approval by the Board of Regents.

2. All students who are enrolled and attending classes during a regular semester or summer session who have paid health fees are eligible for care.

3. Those enrolled in Special Courses, for varying periods of time, who have made previous arrangements for health care coverage at Lafene are eligible for care. (Lists of these students must be furnished prior to being seen at Lafene.)

4. Only students, who have paid the health fee, may elect to have their spouse also covered at Lafene; however, they must pay the spouse fee within 10 days of the time their own health fees are paid. (Children cannot be seen.) 5. Emergency care, prior to referral, will be given anyone who comes in.

6. Students enrolled in 6 hours or less, electing not to pay the health fee during the Fall or Spring semesters, who wish to be seen, will be charged $20 for each office visit. This charge continues until the full health fee has been exceeded, then that student will be afforded the same privileges as the regular fee paying student for the remainder of that semester.

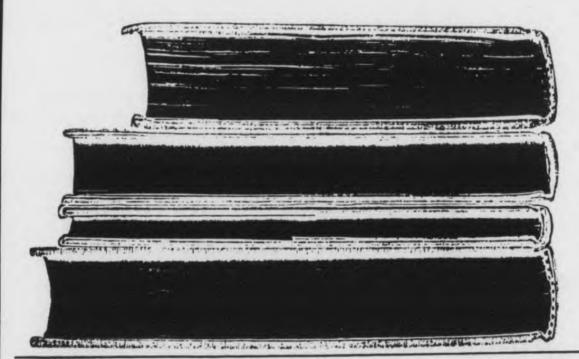

7. Students who were enrolled in the Spring and pre-enrolled for the Fall semester but not attending summer school may pay $15 and be eligible for care during the summer. This fee may be paid within 30 days prior to summer registration and ends the day classes begin. A late fee of $20 will be accepted for the remainder of the summer.

8. Health fees are good until 12 o'clock the night the next semester begins.

NOTE: In addition to the above mentioned fees, there are minimal charges for certain supplies and services and the charges are subject to change without prior notice.

Want To Sell Your Books?

How does the Union Bookstore determine how much your books are worth when you sell them back?

If the Bookstore has notification from the instructor that the books are to be re-adopted for use the next semester and if the Bookstore does not aircady have a sufficient stock on hand, then you will be offered 60% of the publishers current list price. For example if a book sells for $10 new and it meets the requ nents noted above the book would be bought from you for $6 If the Bookstore has not received notice that the book will be sed again, or if it already has a sufficient slock on hand, the book would be worth the current wholesale price as indicated by one of the nation's largest jobbers of used textbooks.

If you have any questions about the price being paid for a textbook. The buyer will be happy to answer any questions which you may have regarding the price baild. Is 60% the usual price paid for textbooks around the country? Definitely not. Most stores in the United States pay only 50% for opes being used again. The Union Bookstore is one of the few stores which pays 60%. And remember, we pay cash. You don't have to take your money out in trade Question: What about paperbacks? Does the 60% policy apply to them

If they are being used again, and if the bookstore needs them you will receive 60% of the publisher's price. If the publisher's price has gone up since I bought my books, will I receive the benefit of that price increase?

Yes, For instance, if you bought your book for $9 and the publishers int price is now $10, you will get $6, not $5.40.

State seeks certificate to ease cash-flow bind

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The State Finance Council will be asked in early July to approve a certificate of indebtedness to avert cash-flow problems in the state general revenue fund later in the month, a state official said Tuesday.

Alden Shields, secretary of administration and former budget director, said the state must pay back its current $75 million certificate by June 30 - the last day of the 1986 fiscal year. And he expects the state will immediately need a cash infusion because of dangerously low balances in the general fund bank account.

"Once we get all the appropriations bills from the Legislature and do a cash-flow analysis, we'll find we're looking at an ending balance on June 30 of $37 or $38 million," Shields said. "By mid-July, we'll be in a deficit position and in all likelihood turn around an issue another certificate of indebtedness."

Issuance of a certificate means the state is shifting some of its own money from other funds to the general revenue fund to pay the bills for the operation of state govern-

It is strictly a paper transaction juggling money in the multi-million pool of revenue which makes up the state treasury. The state is not borrowing money and is not losing any interest on idle funds now invested in state banks.

"We'll be starting the year at a disadvantaged position but with the additional penny sales tax increase, we'll grow back to a healthier financial position by the end of the year," Shields said. "Right now, we've drawn the balances down so low that we're going to experience cash-flow problems earlier in the year."

Western officials express outrage at Soviets

Manhattan, Kansas 66506

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW - Up against a wall of Soviet secrecy, Western governments urged their citizens Wednesday to pull out of the stricken Ukraine, where a nuclear fire spewed more radiation across Europe and touched off a storm of world outrage.

The Kremlin claimed radiation levels were dropping at the devastated Chernobyl nuclear power plant. But a Soviet diplomat was quoted as saying the inferno was 'out of control," and U.S. sources in Washington agreed.

In its most detailed casualty report, the Soviet government Wednesday said two people were killed in the accident and 197 others were hospitalized. But unofficial, unverified reports spoke of higher casualty tolls.

Those reports did not speak of potential long-term casualties, but the London-based Greenpeace environmental group estimated 10,000 Soviets would develop cancer over 30 sider history's worst nuclear disaster.

Some of Kiev's 2.4 million people were fleeing the Ukrainian capital for Moscow, 450 miles to the northeast, West German sources said.

Radioactive clouds, meanwhile, spread as far west as the Swiss Alps and Norway, borne on mile-high years as a result of what many con- But anger built up against the Soviets, who kept word of the deadly nuclear event from the rest of the world until Monday, three days after it happened.

"The Soviet Union has an obligation and duty to the international community to give the fullest possible explanation of what happened and why," Britain's foreign secretary, Sir Geoffrey Howe, said at a West European ministers' meeting in Italy.

His West German counterpart,

Hans-Dietrich Genscher, called on Moscow to shut down all nuclear power stations similar to the crippled Chernobyl plant, which uses an unusual graphite-moderation pro-

The Soviet government has thrown a wall of near-total secrecy around what happened last week at Chernobyl, a four-reactor complex 60 miles north of Kiev.

"I am not authorized to tell you anything," a Ukrainian Health Ministry official said Wednesday, in a typical comment. He was reached by telephone by Moscow.

Later in the day, the official news media carried a 300-word statement by the Soviet Council of Ministers saying remedial measures had reduced the radioactivity spilling from the damaged reactor, and "the radiation levels in the area of the atomic power station (had been) lowered.

It said the chain reaction had been

KSDB-FM to request more funds

By JANELL BERROTH Collegian Reporter

Lee Buller, assistant professor of journalism and mass communications and adviser to KSDB-FM, will go to Student Senate tonight with a request for about $1,500 for a new transmission line.

The transmission line is part of KSDB'S project to raise the station's antenna height and power. Buller did not know the station would need the new tranmission line when he initially requested senate funds.

KSDB-FM's fund-raising committee has succeeded in creating ideas to raise money, but the fund-raising activities have led the committee to a break-even financial situation.

However, Buller said he is not making this request because the station didn't meet its fund-raising goals. He said he learned of the need for a new transmission line April 16.

KAKE had donated the transmission line when they donated the tower, he said.

Buller said part of the "Help Us Get Higher" fund-raising campaign during April was an attempt to raise $5,000 for needed improvements in the tower site, which did not include the transmission line. After the receipts are tallied, the committee believes it will break even.

The original transmission line is obsolete and without it KSDB-FM will not be able to continue their pro-

"In a project this massive there are items that one can't foresee and the transmission line is one of those things," he said. "I regret coming back to Student Senate to request more funds but I had no idea that the transmission line was not being manufactured and the connectors were not available."

He said the reason he is requesting additional money from senate is because he could not think of any other sources that would be willing to

Beginning the week of April 1, KSDB-FM began the HUGH fundraiser with events such as the Alternative Auction, the Car Trash and Smash and the "The Producers" concert April 3 at Mannequins.

Buller said the Trash and Smash netted about $350. In total, the fundraising activities - excluding the "The Producers" concert - raised about $1,500.

The committee's goal was to raise $5,000, but the cost to bring in the See KSDB, Page 12

A student passes through an ivy-covered gate Wednesday at East Stadium. The stadium is an architectural shrine honoring the 45 K-State men who gave their lives in service to their country in World War I.

Structure honors Aggies who died in World War I

By BECKY MARTIN Collegian Reporter

Joggers who now circle the Memorial Stadium track may not know they are running in a shrine to World War I.

The 45 Aggies who gave their lives in service to the country in the war are remembered through the limestone structure

Alumni and friends to the Kansas State Agricultural College gave the stadium as an architectural shrine honoring to the war dead, according to a Feb. 1, 1923 Memorial Stadium KSAC bulletin.

In 1922, President William Jardine appointed a committee to decide what kind of memorial to build for the veterans. J.T. Willard, vice president of the College and dean of Division of General Science, was appointed head of the committee which represented alumni and faculty.

Willard, who spoke for the rest of the committee, referred to the veterans, many of them athletes, as young and full of vigor, and as men who had a high regard for excellence.

Because the men fell in war, a heroic physical contest, the committee believed the veterans would have favored the stadium.

The committee also believed the structure would bring beauty and dignity to the campus and, most of all, would be highly useful to the college and community.

Donations and fund drives raised money for the stadium.

Students of 1922 pledged $77,000 toward the funding of the stadium within six hours after Football Coach Charles Bachman delivered a speech which swayed opinion about the war memorial.

"They made a great sacrifice for you and for men and we are now privileged to show our gratitude by erecting to their memory this monument of loyalty," Bachman stated in the bulletin.

The enthusiastic cooperation of students, faculty, alumni and the business community of Manhattan assured the success of the drive for funds. The city of Manhattan contributed $62,000 to the stadium, according to the KSAC bulletin.

The memorial was dedicated on May 28, 1929, by College President F.D. (David) Farrell.

"1917 - Lest We Forget - 1918," was placed on a piece of mahogany wood along with pictures of the war

The piece was originally intended to be part of the stadium but was instead placed in Anderson Hall. Last summer the piece was moved to the Military Science Building.

In the summer of 1985, a group of students painted an 8 foot by 17 foot World War I mural in the breezeway area of West Stadium. The mural is a fresco, a painting on damp plaster.

Names of the K-State students killed in the war are in the fresco, and it indicates the building is a war memorial.

Construction of the stadium's west stands, which have a seating capacity of 27,000, began in the summer of 1922, and finished in 1923. Work on the east wing of the stadium started in March of 1924 and ended in September of the same year, according to "History of The Kansas State College of Agriculture and Applied Science" by Julius T. Willard.

The enclosing wall was completed in May of 1928. Projects since then have added improvements such as the press box and boxes for presidents' guests.

Additions to the stadium continued at a steady pace. In 1946, dormitory facilities to house 266 students were built in the East and West Stadium, Willard wrote.

In 1948, the athletic council built rooms under the seating deck of the east wing to provide showers, locker space, medical rooms, storerooms for equipment and offices for the coaches.

The Department of Art is currently using the space under West Stadium. East Stadium houses the Purple Masque Theater, offices and classrooms for the Department of Speech, drawing labs for students and the headquarters for the K-State Police.

The stadium interior is now used for intramural activities, athletic practices and occasional concerts among other activities.

University reactor leak unlikely, professor says

By VICKI REYNOLDS Campus Editor

The possibility of a nuclear leak or meltdown at the University nuclear reactor is minimal, said Richard Faw, professor of nuclear engineering and director of the TRIGA Mark II Nuclear Reactor Facility in Ward

Faw said there is little resemblance between the University nuclear reactor and the one at Chernobyl in the Soviet Ukraine, where a nuclear meltdown occurred Satur-

"There's almost zero resemblance plant. between our reactor and a power reactor, much less a Soviet power reactor," he said. "Our reactor is all underwater."

Faw said the University reactor is not a power reactor and does not generate any electricity. Its use is primarily for research and learning.

"It's useless as a power reactor," he said. "We generate no electricity, but it's very useful as a research and medical tool."

Faw also said the amount of radiation at the reactor isn't as great as that at the Soviet nuclear power

"The amount of radioactive materials we have is tiny in comparison to the Russian power plant,"

Faw said the reactor here is inspected at least twice a year by the Reactor Safeguards Committee, whose members are appointed by the University president and include faculty from nuclear engineering and other departments who are familiar with radiation safety prac-

"All operations and experiments performed, all procedures and all maintenance are carried out under their (the committee's) approval," he said. "It is their responsibility to see that all of these occur within the guidelines of our operating license issued by the federal government and with all federal regulations on reactor safety.' In addition, the federal Nuclear Regulatory Commission inspects the University facility to make sure it complies with federal safety standards.

The facility operates within the code of federal regulations for dealing with nuclear activity, but these extensive requirements apply "in general, whether you're dealing with a nuclear reactor or nuclear medicine in a clinic," Faw said.

The reactor is also operated under guidelines which are pertinent to the University site, he said.

"Before we got our license," Faw said, "we had to go through a careful safety analysis and the results became part of our operating license."

The reactor is never run without a licensed operator on duty to monitor

Performance to honor Acker

A University reception honoring President Duane Acker and his wife, Shirley, will take place from 1 to 5 p.m. Sunday at the Manhattan Holiday Inn Holidome, 530 Richards Drive. All students, faculty and staff are invited.

There will also be a performance by student performing groups as a tribute to Acker and his wife at 8 p.m. Sunday in McCain Auditorium. The concert is open to the public.

Former engineer questions safety

JERUSALEM - A former Soviet nuclear engineer who worked on the reactor that caught fire said Wednesday the technical and safety standards were so low when he emigrated eight years ago that more disasters could occur.

Boris Tokarasky, former quality engineer for the Soviet government Institute for Reactor and Power Station Construction, said he was involved in the construction of the Chernobyl power station before he emigrated to Israel.

'The nuclear reactors in the Soviet Union are of such a safety standard that what happened in Chernobyl could happen very soon in any of the other reactors in the Soviet Union, and I have no doubt of this," Tokarasky said in an interview with Armed Forces Radio, which was taped and broadcast Thursday morning.

Tokarasky, 49, immigrated to Israel from Leningrad in 1978. He declined to say what work he does now, although he said he had lost touch with Soviet nuclear developments since leaving the country.

Swedes receive assurance of safety

STOCKHOLM, Sweden - Soviet diplomats assured worried Scandinavian governments Wednesday that conditions had stabilized at a nuclear reactor in the Ukraine following a major accident, but offered little new information about what happened.

The accident, Leis ved by outside experts to have begun Friday, sent a cloud of radioactive material over Scandinavia and Eastern Europe

Swedish authorities on Wednesday advised east coast residents not to drink rainwater and banned imports of fresh meat, fish and vegetables from the Soviet Union and East bloc countries because of possible radiation contamination.

Finland said it was sending a plane to evacuate about 100 Finnish students, tourists and construction workers from Kiev, about 80 miles south of the crippled Chernobyl nuclear reactor in the Soviet Winds shifted Wednesday to turn the invisible plume of radioactive dust away from Scandinavia, back toward the Soviet Union and East Europe. Radiation levels were reported declining Wednesday in Sweden and Denmark but still were high in northern Sweden.

There were no signs of public panic, but hundreds of Danes flocked to drugstores to buy iodine tablets, which can hinder the body's absorption of iodine.

Activist seeks nuclear victim aid

TOPEKA - Helen Caldicott, the world's leading nuclear freeze activist, said Wednesday she hopes the United States will offer to treat victims of the nuclear plant disaster in the Soviet Union as an act of friendship which could help stop the arms race. "Wouldn't it be wonderful if we'd take in the Soviet victims, give them treatment like bone marrow transplants, and make a gesture of good will?" Caldicott asked at a news conference.

She was in Topeka to deliver a lecture Wednesday night in a series at Washburn University named for Dr. Karl Menninger. "If we really cared about the future of mankind, we'd move in and help them," she said. "There'd be no arms race if we did things like

The situation in Russia, Caldicott said, "is disastrous." She predicted massive, longterm public health problems in the Soviet Union because of the accidents at the Chernoby

"It will contaminate an area like Pennsylvania, and it will last a long time," she said. "It puts humans at risk. It's the most carcinogenic agent we know. That land that has been contaminated isn't a shortterm proposition. It's hundreds of years. They'll never be able to grow food there again.'

Stevenson gains new running mate

CHICAGO - Adlai Stevenson, whose campaign for governor has been waylaid by followers of extremist Lyndon LaRouche Jr., has persuaded Associate Judge Michael Howlett Jr. to run as his candidate for lieutenant governor on a third-party ticket, sources told the Associated Press Wednesday.

Howlett, a Democrat and the son of former Secretary of State Michael Howlett, agreed to run Tuesday, sources in the Democratic Howlett, reached in his chambers Wednesday, declined comment on the report. He would have to vacate his judgeship to join Stevenson's campaign.

Stevenson's running mate in the March 18 Democratic primary, state Sen. George Sangmeister, D-Mokena, lost to Mark Fairchild, a follower of LaRouche, who espouses bizarrre theories of global conpiracies. Janice Hart, another LaRouche devotee, defeated Aurelia Pucinski in the party primary for Secretary of State.

Stevenson had filed a lawsuit challenging a state law that required independent candidates to have filed nominating petitions by last Dec. 16 to be on the Nov. 4 ballot.

Government negotiates settlement

WASHINGTON - The Department of Energy has approved a $315 million settlement with Atlantic Richfield Co. that federal officials say is the largest oil pricing cash settlement ever negotiated administratively by the department.

The settlement resolved Energy Department allegations, made in October 1985, that Arco overcharged nearly $240 million in sales of price-controlled crude oil. The department alleged that Arco's total liability, including interest, was $499.3 million.

Under the settlement, the company will pay $313 million in restitution and $2 million to avoid civil penalties that could have been sought by the Energy Department.

Pavarotti performs for hometown

MODENA, Italy - Tenor Luciano Pavarotti celebrated a quartercentury of success with a hometown performance of the same role he sang as the young winner of a competition in 1961.

The crowd in Modena's Teatro Communale applauded for nearly 10 minutes at the end of the first act of "La Boheme," in which Pavarotti sang the role of Rodolfo.

Among those attending Tuesday was Pavarotti's father, Ferdinando Pavarotti, who used to sing with his son in a church choir in this city 25 miles northwest of Bologna.

Stars gather for AIDS fund-raiser

NEW YORK - Some of the biggest names on Fashion Avenue and Hollywood Boulevard, all decked out in their party best, posed for photos and chipped in $150 for a buffet to raise money for AIDS

Designer Calvin Klein and actress Elizabeth Taylor served as cohosts of Tuesday's party.

It was expected to raise an initial $500,000, said Dr. Mathilde Krim, co-chairman of the American Foundation for AIDS Research. Pictures of the party-goers will be used for a newspaper and magazine

Among those representing the entertainment industry were Yoko Ono and her son, Sean Lennon; actresses Brooke Shields, Mariel Hemingway and Dina Merrill; and singers Peter Allen and Grace Jones. Designers included Mary McFadden, Donna Karan, Jackie Rogers, Willi Smith and Jeffrey Banks.

Senior to continue education in India

By DIXIE GLANVILLE Collegian Reporter

Brett Lambert, senior in political science, recently received notice that he was a recipient of a Rotary International Foundation Scholarship for Graduate International Study. By receiving this scholarship, Lambert earned the opportunity to choose where he wanted to study.

Beginning July 22, he will begin a stay in India, to pursue international studies at Jawaharlal Nehru University in New Delhi. The master's program is scheduled to be completed in May of 1987.

"I have an interest in nations that have attempted or have been successful in neutrality in the political environment between east and west," Lambert said.

"I'm interested in developing nations, and I'm interested in developing democratic nations. All three of those happen to be a definition of India," he said.

He said he hopes to learn more about policies of developing nations in relation to the superpowers.

The Rotary scholarship was designed to increase international understanding and awareness by allowing individuals from other countries to learn more about Americans and by allowing Americans to learn more about other countries.

"I could have gone some place like London, Australia or New Zealand," he said. "Those weren't exactly cultures we needed to get to know any better. There are certainly enough people doing that. India was something new to me.'

In addition to the classes he will be taking to fulfill the master's program, he will be lecturing with the Rotary Club in India.

He also has an obligation to Rotary to come back to Manhattan at some point to travel and speak about his experiences in India.

From the people he has talked to who know about India and the school he will be attending, he anticipates finding a liberal school atmosphere and an intellectual environment where discussion of political aspects flows freely. Another impression he received from his sources centers around a nation that when he sees a car driving down the street, he may also see an ox cart like those used 4,000 years

"It's a nation with one foot in the past and one foot in the present and both feet are being dragged toward' the future irresistably," he said.

The last two summers, Lambert has worked in Washington for the Georgetown Center for Strategic and International Studies as a research assistant for the political-military

"They (the people at CSIS) said you really should be careful of going to someplace like India because if you ever go into government service or anything like that they're going to notice that you've been to India and may think you're an expert and send you back there," he said.

In October 1984 he spent a couple of weeks in Germany on a national securities exchange.

"That gave me a greater outlook. I was able to better understand how the Europeans look at events differently than we. At that time it was catch phrase this semester in Student Senate. So does the phrase "next year."

Union managers may need spending review

Student Senator Sally Howard, sophomore in pre-professional secondary education, has foreseen the upcoming fee crisis and is doing her part to prevent it. She questions whether most senators have the proper accounting knowledge to adequately evaluate Union spending. The Union will ask to increase its portion of the student activity fee from $12 to $17 per student per semester next year.

Howard has asked a professor in accounting and an honorary society with students majoring in accounting to review the Union's budget. Details will be worked the repair and replacement out this summer.

The Union's repair and replacement fund, which comes from a $1.25 fee and totals $60,000 annualy, has been saved for several years and has only been used to fund major new equipment.

Re: The burning of a Libyan flag at the "Smash Khadafy Bash" at a local tavern on

A flag is a symbol of a culture and a nation. Its colors and patterns represent things that are very dear to the people of a country. When you burn a flag, you express your disrespect for everything that flag means and for culture itself.

But when you burn a flag, you are also burning your humility, you burn your ability to see beyond your own nose. When you burn a flag, the smoke blinds and closes your mind even more, and you become a uniform mass of mindless beings.

Stopping world war

Re: Rich Harris' editorial, "Slipping submarines from water good step," in the April 22 Collegian: I never cease to be amazed at the simplistic reality imposed on the American public by the people in the media who supposedly "know" the facts. The editorial staff of the Collegian has not altered this view of mine, despite its "enlightened" atmosphere. Specifically, I am referring to Harris' editorial on the Reagan administration's decision to dismantle two Poseidon submarines. Harris was correct in his observation that this move was made to keep the United States in line with SALT II. However. to believe that this move was done in a benevolent manner by an administration interested in arms reduction and world peace is a gross misinterpretation of the facts. The two Poseidon submarines each contain enough firepower to destroy more than 200 of the Soviet Union's largest cities (approximately nine megatons). The new Trident submarine contains enough firepower to destroy every major city in the Northern Hemisphere (over 300 warheads and 24

Could Harris please explain to me how trading 18 megatons for 24 megatons lessens the threat of war, or can be seen on any terms as promoting world peace? Submarine launch missiles are destablizing anyhow because of their first-strike capabilities. The Reagan administration continues to pour billions of dollars into the production of these planet killing machines.

Simplistic, ideological rhetoric does as little to promote a safe and peaceful world as does releasing new, high-tech means of destroying ourselves. Why can't we get the real "facts" and put an end to this insanity before it puts an end to everything?

Political madness

Re: Mike Riley's column, "Battling the Soviets in Afghanistan," in the April 22 Col-

I firmly agree with Riley in his condemnation of Soviet aggression in Afghanistan. Soviet actions there have been deplorable. However, the saddest fact for me is that our own policies and actions have essentially muted any credible voice that the United States might have to speak out against such human rights atrocities. Our "moral high ground" over the Soviets has been drastically eroded by a foreign policy that consistently places the rights of the people involved second to the advancement of our own so-called interests. Consider the following:

- In Central America, the Reagan administration supports a group of ex-Somoza gunmen who have killed more than 11,000 noncombatants in Nicaragua. All this in order to overthrow a duly elected govern-

- In South Africa, we have unswervingly supported one of the most racist and murderous regimes of any political stripe in the world. Even under tremendous public pressure, Reagan has done virtually nothing to break ties with these criminals.

In the Middle East, we nod and wink as Israel bombs Tunisia and Lebanon. Then we drop some of our own bombs on Libya and pretend we've addressed the problem of ter-

- In the Philippines, we aided and abetted Ferdinand Marcos in his 20-year dictatorship, but when the Filipino people finally threw him off with no help from us, all of Washington took credit for liberating the Philippines. This is by no means an exhaustive list.

How can we honestly expect to be taken seriously as an expositor of basic human rights when our own recent history is so full of oppression and collaboration with oppressors? The rest of the world is not so easily convinced as Americans are that our ends justify the gruesome means we often employ. America's beloved war against Communism is being lost more by alienation of our own allies through our actions than by Soviet aggression. We must get our own house in order before we can meaningfully criticize the actions of others. It seems foolish to point fingers when we have blood on our hands. Greg Jarrett senior in electrical engineering

Gathering the eggs

I'm sure that most people have heard the old joke about the man who walks into the psychologist's office and proclaims that his brother is crazy because he believes that he is a chicken. The psychologist tells the man that he can cure his brother, and asks the man to bring his brother to see him.

When the man balks at the suggestion, the doctor asks, "Don't you want me to convince your brother that he is not a chicken?" The man replies, "Well, I'm not sure, Doc. You see, I need the eggs. For the past four years, I have trained students at K-State in preparation for teaching. Observers must wonder, however, why students enter the teaching profession at a time when teachers' salaries are relatively low, when educators are held largely accountable for a nation's failures and when even the prideful image of the teacher has been

I believe we do it because we need the

Although teaching may be an illogical and often times "crazy" profession, we, like the man who seeks help for his brother, enjoy the few eggs that we gather each day. When students think and learn and laugh, we have eggs-a-plenty.

I am sad to say that I will be leaving K-State this summer. I have taken a position at Utah State University wherein I will direct the educational psychology program for undergraduates and, of course, teach educational psychology.

I am sad because I have thoroughly enjoyed the many undergraduates that I have taught and have learned from at K-State. It is the students I will remember most fondly, and miss so dearly. Thanks for all the eggs.

Lights unnecessary

Recently, several students have written letters expressing a concern about the intersection of College Heights and Denison Avenue. We are writing in response to let the University community know that student government is working on a solution to the safety problem at that intersection. According to city regulations, in order to qualify for a pedestrian crosswalk signal light, an intersection must have more than 600 vehicles and 150 pedestrians each hour for any light hours on an average day.

The Student Affairs and Social Services Services Standing Committee of Student Senate conducted a traffic and pedestrian flow count on April 9. The results of our study indicate that the intersection does not qualify for a crossing light.

The results of the survey were sent to Jerry Petty, deputy director of public works for the city of Manhattan. We are now awaiting a response to our request. The committee is uncertain about what action the city will take, but we are hopeful that it will be in the best interest of the students. We will continue our efforts to resolve this problem.

Controlling traffic

Despite much recent attention, there remains no traffic light control device at the intersection of College Heights and Denison Avenue. This intersection is very dangerous to thousands of pedestrians who cross it Since it's a public street, the city of Manhattan must act on this issue. According to Jerry Petty, director of public works for the city of Manhattan, the intersection doesn't warrant a stoplight. This is the best solution, but would cost the city approximately $60,000.

A less expensive but also less effective solution would be to install a crosswalk at a cost of $100. But Petty believes the intersection would be more dangerous with a crosswalk. He feels that a crosswalk would give people a "false sense of security" and could lead them to walk in front of oncoming

The people who use this intersection and feel there is a need for some kind of traffic control, should give Petty a telephone call and let him know.

Police train neighbors to stop crime

By BECKY MARTIN Collegian Reporter

Prospective criminals casing a neighborhood may take heed when they see a sign which reads: "WARNING — NEIGHBORHOOD WATCH - WE CALL THE POLICE."

The neighborhood-watch program is comprised of a group of neighbors trained by crimeprevention officers to watch for unusual activity in their neighborhood, said Sgt. Darrell Yarnall, special projects and community-service officer for Riley County Police Department.

The program involves three elements, with neighbors uniting to get to know each other and working together toward a mutual goal.

Other elements include citizen crime-prevention techniques.

Yarnall said people are sometimes hesitant to call the police because they feel like they're being a "nosy neighbor" or it's nothing worth bothering the police about.

"Even though some situations have an innocent explanation, it's better to investigate them before it's too late," he said.

The first step in starting a program is to contact a local lawenforcement agency, Yarnall said. The officers may be able to help organize the first meeting.

After contacting the agency, a resident can talk to neighbors, explaining the value of the program and its benefit to the neighborhood.

In order to begin a program in a

The second meeting is the training session which teaches the residents what to look for.

The program does not require anyone to take personal risks to prevent crime, but is designed to train members to know when to contact police and what constitutes crime, he said.

Yarnall said the program does not cost the neighborhood, since the RCPD supplies two signs for each neighborhood.

One major crime-prevention technique Yarnall said he teaches members is "Operation Identifica-

Suicide focus of mental health month

By The Collegian Staff

May is the beginning of mental health month, and the Pawnee Mental Health Center is advocating that everyone "Plant the Seeds of Good Mental Health."

Nationally, the focus for mental health month is teen-age suicide.

"The theme we are using in our 10 counties is 'Plant the Seeds of Good Mental Health," said Linda Teener, services manager of consultation and education at the

and a package of seeds inside. "The seeds themselves are one way of improving mental health. The flowers are a reminder, when they bloom, of the progress of good mental health." Teener said.

The center is sending brochures to their referral services and professionals in the community who work with the center throughout the

"This is a reminder that they need to care for their mental health also," she said.

"We are also sending 3,000 brochures to area churches, preschools and nursing homes. This allows the children to plant them together and watch them grow,"

The mental health center will be hosting open houses in Manhattan and Concordia. The Manhattan open house will be from 3 to 6 p.m. Friday, and the Concordia open house will be from 4 to 6 p.m. today.

"The public is invited to come free of charge to look around and ask questions," she said.

Throughout the year Pawnee Mental Health offers programs to the public on various topics such as stress management, child abuse, community skills, drug and alcohol abuse and teen suicide.

Jury charges 2 inmates

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Kan. - A federal grand jury has charged two inmates at the Kansas State Penitentiary with mailing a fake letter bomb to Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole.

David Jude Leaverton and David Eugene Nicholson were each charged Tuesday with one count of threatening Dole, R-Kan., and one count of sending an explosive device through the mail.

The letter bomb, which authorities said was a hoax and was not intended to explode, was mailed March 14 and intercepted March 18 at the main post office in Washington, according to the indictment.

The explosive consisted of potassium chlorate and sulfur. materials which are not flammable, the indictment said. The substance apparently was fashioned by grinding up match heads.

The letter contained a note saying, 'I'm tired of all the mental games you people play with me. So here is something in return. By a real Freedom Fighter David Jude Leave. This could have blown your (expletive) head off. Think about it.

Professor criticizes stereotypes of Palestinians

By BOB OLSON

Collegian Reporter

The "human dimension" is the single most overlooked facet of the problems in the Middle East, a political scientist said Wednesday night.

Don Betz, professor of political science at Northeastern Oklahoma State University, Tahlequah, spoke on "In Search of Peace in the Middle East," to more than 60 people in the Union Little Theater.

He said the stereotype of all Palestinians being "either terrorists or refugees," is one that is widely believed in America, but one that needs to be corrected. There are "more facts and less understanding in America," about this issue, Betz said. Correcting misperceptions of Americans about the situation in the Middle East is one of the most important things he hopes to see happen in the near future.

"We look at the world through personal ideas. If we conclude that some people in the Middle East are subhuman it is easy to rationalize that they are all killers and terrorists. Instead of a 'knee-jerk' reaction, we need to look at the human dimension," he said.

There is more emphasis for peace now than ever before, Betz said. The facts are undeniable that politics and the social structure are in a state of flux in the Middle East, he said.

Betz said he has heard Christian fundamentalists say the problem will not be solved until "the Second Coming of Jesus Christ," and that the problem "is not going away."

To that philosophy he raises the point that the problems are a result of human actions, he said. It is only right that solutions should come

Speer's high school jump hard to top

After a slow freshman year, Brad Speer is gaining greater self confidence as a high jumper. Speer holds the school records in both the indoor and outdoor event, as well as qualifying for the NCAA national meet.

By ANGIE SCHUMAKER Collegian Reporter

For an athlete, the transition from high school to collegiate competition can be traumatic, and for high jumper Brad Speer, it was nearly devastating.

Speer, a sophomore, cleared 7-41/2 during his senior year at Wichita East High School. That particular jump opened many doors for him. He won the state championship, became third on the national alltime list of high school high jumpers and was highly recruited Every success story has a flipside, however, and for Speer, the jump created an obstacle which he has found difficult to overcome.

His collegiate performances to date have not measured up to the success of his high school career. His best jump, 7-31/2, did not even come until April 5, at the Kansas State Invitational.

"He had a disasterous freshman year," Track and Field Coach Steve Miller said. "Part of the disaster was caused by the change of environment (from high school to college), and his expectations were so high. He felt he was going to beat the world when in effect his best jump (in college) would still not be close to being the best jump in college track.

"He put a lot of undue stress and pressure on himself, and was simply not able to cope with it," Miller said. "He started off slowly, and it just got worse and worse instead of better and better. He just had a terrible year."

"Mainly what I experienced last year was an adjustment to school," Speer said. "It was frustrating. The new experience of practicing more hours, traveling and studying was difficult. I was also bothered by injuries and that just compounded the problem.

"I kept thinking that eventually there would be a breakthrough, but it never came," he said. "There were a lot of times when I felt like giving up, but I got a lot of support rom my dad.'

At the conclusion of his freshman year, Speer had several choices to make, according to Miller.

"One was he could leave and say 'look, I'm not going to stay here anymore, it's your fault," Miller said. "Number two was, he could have blamed everybody but himself - the situation, the circumstances, the facilities, anything. But Brad instead chose to recognize that he just had a bad

'Cat redshirt Heard decides to transfer

By TONY CARBAJO Sports Writer

Jack Hartman's recruiting class of 1985 has slowly dwindled in size since Lon Kruger took over the basketball reigns more than a month ago.

Now that group has become one player smaller. Rodney Heard, a redshirt guard on this year's basketball team, has decided to transfer to another school at the end of the current semester because of differences with Kruger, the Detroit native said.

Heard said he had a "big fuss" with Kruger in a meeting on Monday and had his release papers in his hand on Tuesday. The freshman-tobe said he intends to join the basketball program at Michigan State or Detroit next season. He is also considering Highland Park Community College in Michigan.

"Here is a coach who has never seen me play, and he acts like he doesn't want me," Heard said. "He recruited me when he was at Pan American - I don't know. He said I was saying negative stuff about the program (to recruits).'

Heard, a highly-touted scorer who was recruited out of Detroit's Cody High School by such schools as DePaul, Michigan, Southern California and Stanford, said he has already been in contact with coaches from Michigan State.

"Michigan State said to come and sit out, but I'm thinking about going to a junior college (Highland Park) first," Heard said. "I don't want to have to sit out again (next year). It killed me sitting out this year - it

Heard indicated that he was no longer content with Kruger's coaching philosophies in running the

"I feel mixed up," Heard said. "I love Ahearn, I love the fans and I love the school. "I would rather have him say 'Rodney, we signed another guard and playing time might be tight next year' and I would have understood.'

Kruger has already signed four guard prospects for next year and is still pursuing junior college all-American Chris Blocker from the College of Southern Idaho, who was on campus last weekend. The Collegian has also learned that Kruger is pursuing another guard to play for the Wildcats next season.

A 6-3 high school prospect from Houston, Texas, was on campus Monday for a visit, possibly to fill Heard's scholarship vacancy.

With Heard's intention to leave the program next year, the basketball squad has now lost two freshmen who came into the program last year. That number is also in jeopardy of going up with the uncertainty surrounding Norris Coleman's eligibility with the National Collegiate Athletic Association's eligibility sub-committee which is on appeal.

Earlier, Benny Green announced he was seeking another school for his services next season as a result of Hartman's resignation. Green said he will attend either Arkansas or Tennessee next season.

"I'm not going to sit out anywhere," Green said. "I'm not going to decide until I get home (this

Harrison, Struckhoff win Big Eight awards

By The Collegian Staff

The honors just keep coming in for Kenny Harrison and Jacque Struckhoff of the K-State track and Harrison and Struckhoff, who have been consistent winners in meets hout the year, swept the Big Eight Conference's male and female track athlete of the month awards for April.

Harrison, the National Collegiate Athletic Association indoor longjump champion, set K-State and meet records in both the long jump (26-7) and triple jump (55-11) at the Kansas Relays, April 18-19 at Lawrence. Harrison's triple jump was the 13th-best ever in the event and the ninth best by an American.

Struckhoff, a winner at KU in the 3,000-meter run (9:14.2), has qualified for the NCAA Outdoor Track and Field Meet in four events - the 1,500-meter, 3,000-meter, 5,000-meter and 10,000-meter runs.

"It's just a confirmation of their abilities," K-State Coach Steve Miller said of the awards. "I think both (Harrison and Struckhoff) represent the best in sports. They're both quality citizens, they're both good students and they're both highly gifted people. I think they both deserve it and I'm very happy about

Royals' ninth inning rally downs Detroit

By The Associated Press

DETROIT - Angel Salazar doubled home the tying run and scored on Willie Wilson's single, keying a five-run rally in the ninth inning Wednesday night that helped the Kansas City Royals over the Detroit Tigers 7-3.

The Royals did most of their damage against relief ace Willie Hernandez, 1-1, with Detroit leading 3-2 in the ninth.

Lynn Jones followed Darryl Motley's leadoff walk against starter Dan Petry with a sacrifice off Hernandez, and Salazar then doubled, tying the game. Jim Sundberg hit a pinch-single that moved Salazar to third and Wilson singled through Detroit's drawn-in infield. Charlie Leibrandt, 4-0, got the win for the Royals.

Ex-Wildcats get late-night phone calls By DARIN RUSSELL

Collegian Reporter Better late than never.

Neither former K-State standout Barton Hundley nor Tim Stone minded being called late Tuesday night. Both were picked in the late rounds of the National Football League draft that began in New York Tuesday at 7

Hundley was picked by the Chicago Bears in the 10th round. Stone was drafted by the Cincinnati Bengals in the 11th round.

"I was getting ready for bed when I got the call," said Hundley, former K-State defensive back. "I was excited, because I was beginning to think I wouldn't go in the drafts at Former K-State offensive lineman Tim Stone had already gone to bed, but said he didn't mind answering the phone.

"It was 12:45 (a.m. Wednesday) when I got the phone call," Stone said. "When I found out who it was, I didn't mind at all.'

Hundley was beginning to hope he wouldn't be drafted when he had not yet been picked by the ninth round.

"I was beginning to hope I wouldn't be drafted," Hundley said. "If I didn't get drafted, I could go as a free agent. But when I was called by Chicago, I changed my mind."

Hundley said he was not originally contacted by Chicago, but said he was told over the phone last night that they (Chicago) wanted to bring in "some new people." Hundley said he realized the Bears had good depth at the strong safety position, but said Chicago thought he had a "pretty fair shot" at the free safety spot.

Hundley said he would let his agent, Jim Fender, take care of the "financial" negotiations and would concentrate on getting ready for a mini-camp May 18.

Stone was contacted by Cincinnati offensive coach Jim McNally, the same coach who came to Manhattan to talk to him.

"I had a good time talking to him when he came to Manhattan, and I was even more pleased that he made the call," Stone said. "But anything would have been OK, I just wanted to have a chance to go somewhere and prove myself.'

Stone said he thought he had a good chance at Cincinnati, because he thought they lacked depth at some line positions.

Speer

"He chose to make an adjustment," Miller said. "His adjustment was that he was going to concentrate more, do a better job in school - which he has done substantially - train harder, regroup his perceptions and perspectives, and try to keep everything in proportion. He has, and so far he's been successful.'

Goals play a large role in an athlete's life, and Miller feels that Speer's goals are instrumental to his career as a high jumper.

"I think a person has to have two sets of goals — a realistic goal, something you really feel you can accomplish, and then a dream, something that is far-fetched," Miller said.

"Brad's realistic goals are to be Big Eight champion, to be an NCAA (National Collegiate Athletic Association) all-American, to potentially be an NCAA champion, obviously, to break all of the school records and to be the best jumper he can. I'm sure those are all realistic goals that are well within the confines of his ability.

"The dreams are of being an Olympian, being a world champion, and possibly being the world record holder. Brad and I talk about those things from time to time, and I think he's got a good perception of what he's doing. He's got a chance if he keeps his mind and body going in the same direction," Miller said.

Speer has accomplished several short-range goals. He has jumped over 7-foot in almost every meet this year, he holds the indoor and outdoor school records, and he qualified for the NCAA national meet.

He did not compete in the Kansas Relays on April 18-19. Because Speer had shin splints, Miller decided to give him the weekend off.

"It was not a serious injury, but serious enough that we felt like it wasn't worth taking a chance, so we sat him out," Miller said. "I had to look at the bigger picture of things. I don't think immediate gratification is necessarily the answer. I think the bottom line was, he just needed a week off, and we gave it to him."

Miller's decision to sit Speer out of the meet apparently paid off. Last weekend, Speer placed first in the high jump at the Drake Relays in Des Moines, Iowa.

The jump of 7-31/2 tied his recordsetting effort earlier this season, but Miller believes that defeating a field of competitors that included the top two high jumpers in the nation was his most important accomplishment.

"The field he beat was more significant than the height of the jump," Miller said. "He beat Dothel Edwards from the University of Georgia (ranked No. 1) and Maurice Crumby from the University of Arizona (ranked No. 2)."

The key to Speer's recent success,

For four years The Sound Shop has been trying to convince this area's financial community that students are good credit risks. Well, we finally did it. The Sound Shop is now able to offer students financing on home or car audio equipment. And best of all:

- YOU DO NOT HAVE TO BE EMPLOYED.
- YOU DO NOT HAVE TO HAVE ESTABLISHED CREDIT.

You can get that stereo equipment you were planning on buying next fall, now, and save money by beating the imminent price increases! Enjoy your music all summer and for any equipment purchased by May 4th The Sound Shop will refund any interest charges if you pay off the loan in 90 days.

Example:

Yamaha CD-300 Compact Disc Player

Total Price $270.65 (including tax)

 Down Payment 30.65

Amount Financed 240.00 Your monthly payments (12) 22.34

28.08* Finance Charge

*Remember, if you pay off the loan within 90 days - we will refund any interest paid. (Of course, some qualifications must be met, however, it's never been easier to establish your credit.)

Child center plans programs

By SUE DAWSON Collegian Reporter

After completing its first two semesters of operation, the KSU Child Care Cooperative has decided to establish several new programs, including a summer session.

The cooperative has set up "Summer Celebration," a summer care program in June and July, said Nancy Bolsen, director at the cooperative. Faculty, students and staff with elementary school-age children are eligible to participate in this program.

Children who have completed kindergarten up to those who have finished third grade are qualified to participate in this session.

The summer program includes a variety of activities, from indoor educational sessions and quiet time to outdoor play. Snacks and meals from Kramer Food Center are also provided for the children, she said.

The summer program fees will be based on family size and income level, Bolsen said.

The children may arrive at the cooperative, located in Jardine L-6, between 7 and 9 a.m., Bolsen said. Pick-up time will be from 3:30 to 5:15

The program was designed with current cooperative members' children in mind, but is open to the University community, she said.

Bolsen said plans for infants and an after-school program next fall are also under way.

"We have planned for 12 places for infants," Bolsen said. The cooperative would be able to serve more than the specified number, but only 12 infants could be cared for at one time.

Children up to 1 year old who are walking are eligible for the program. Stimulation activities for the infants have also been planned, including muscle development and visual

The after-school program is open to students as young as kindergarten age, but a cut-off age has not been determined, Bolsen said. A variety of activities will be available to students, such as help with homework.

Bolsen said the cooperative is considering transportation to and from the local schools for the after-school

"We are looking at a leased or purchased van of some kind that would meet all the safety regulations," she

Carlin to travel to China, Japan

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Hoping to establish a stronger commercial relationship between Kansas and two countries in the Far East, Gov. John Carlin announced Wednesday he will lead a 22-day trade mission to the People's Republic of China and Japan starting May 13.

Carlin said the visit, which also will include stops in Hong Kong and Hawaii, is designed to follow up trade missions he led to the Far East in 1979 and 1984 as well as those conducted recently by legislative leaders and other of-

"Only by following up on the contacts we've made through the years can we continue to multiply our trade dividends and strengthen the economic cooperation we have established with the People's Republic of China and Japan," Carlin said in a statement.

The 46-member trade delegation, composed of representatives of state agriculture and economic development agencies, private businesses and the governor's staff, is scheduled to leave Topeka May 13 and fly to Hong Kong, where the group will remain until

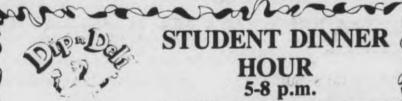

The delegation next will visit the city of Beijing, where they will meet May 19-20 with mainland China's national government officials and business leaders. From May 21 to May 24, the group is scheduled to visit Kansas' sister state, Henan Province.

Other stops on the trip are Shanxi Province, a heavy mineral producing area, on May 25-26; Tokyo, to attend the grand opening of the Kansas-Toyko trade office and make key business contacts May 27-31; and Honolulu on June 1.

A statement issued by Carlin's press office said that during the stay in Toyko, the group would "call on leading Japanese industries that have indicated an interest in Kansas or ... have active site selection searches underway.'

In addition to representatives of the Kansas Board of Agriculture, the Kansas Department of Economic Development, Carlin has invited legislative leaders to select four lawmakers to be part of the delegation.

The cost of the trip for the governor and his staff, state economic development officials and legislators is estimated at $41,500. The Board of Agriculture's cost will be about $31,400 and the private business representatives will pay their own way.

Of the 197 people hospitalized, 49 were discharged after a checkup, it said. The statement also criticized Western news agencies for "spreading rumors" that thousands had been killed.

But, again, the Soviet statement offered little on the cause and effects of the accident. The most detailed information came from intelligence and other U.S. sources in Washington, apparently obtained via U.S. surveillance satellites.

Harold Denton, a safety expert at the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission, told reporters it was unclear what touched off the reactor fire last Friday, but by Saturday it had evolved into a meltdown — the burning up of the uranium fuel core, an extremely dangerous event — and by Sunday a chemical explosion occurred that ripped the reactor building apart.

He estimated the fire would burn for weeks, and U.S. intelligence sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said a second Chernobyl reactor had become involved, apparently in a meltdown. The fire "is still not controlled," said one.

Although Soviet ambassadors in several European capitals said the Chernobyl situation had been "stabilized," the Soviet envoy to Switzerland, Ivan Ippolitov, was quoted by Swiss officials as telling them it was still "out of control."

British diplomats pressed Soviet authorities for help in evacuating about 100 British travelers and students from Kiev and Minsk, 200 miles northwest of the nuclear plant and apparently in the path of radioactive winds.

French, Finnish, West German and other foreign officials also issued travel advisories to their citizens. One diplomat, who would not be identified, complained that none of the embassies had received substantial information from the Soviets.

The Soviet government Tuesday said four towns near the nuclear site had been evacuated, including Pripyat, a new town of 25,000 people built up around the plant.

But a West German group, the International Organization for Human Rights, said the scare had spread to Kiev.

"Unknown numbers of refugees have left the city of Kiev for the past two days," said the organization, which said its information came from contacts in Moscow.

it, he said, and personnel continuously monitor the radiation levels of the reactor and those of the atmosphere.

"We monitor the reactor power level with four independent instrumentation levels. If any one of those fails, we can't operate the reactor," he said. "Also, we monitor the temperature with two independent instruments, with strict regulations on temperature control.

"It's designed so that even the most flagrant error in its operating procedure would not cause damage to the reactor or the operator monitoring it," he said.

The five people who monitor the facility are all licensed civil service reactor operators who had to take a "very vigorous written, practical and medical examination" before they were licensed, Faw said.

The reactor is in a containment structure which, Faw said, would "contain any leaks but not an explosion"

Faw said the only time the alarm has sounded at the reactor site was when the instruments detected some natural radiation in the air "brought in by our own ventilation system."

"I want to stress, however, that our reactor is always underwater, it operates at low temperatures, and it doesn't generate any electricity," Faw said.

Soviet Union rejects offers for U.S. help

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW - The Soviet Union told a nervous world Thursday that radiation from the nuclear plant disaster was decreasing, but one of its diplomats said other countries should not relax because the "accident is not over.'

The Kremlin presented a calm face, rejecting offers of help from the United States and other countries, but an international bonemarrow transplant organization said its offer to aid victims had been accepted.

Traditional May Day parades were held as usual, including one in Kiev, the Ukrainian city of 2.4 million only 80 miles from the Chernobyl power plant where a reactor caught fire Friday. State television showed colorfully dressed folk dancers performing

The cause of the accident has not been revealed, but Soviet radiation expert Pavel Ramzaev said when asked Thursday if it was a meltdown of the reactor core: "I suppose

There were conflicting reports about whether the reactor fire had been extinguished. U.S. intelligence sources had said Wednesday in Washington that it still raged and could burn for weeks.

Vitaly Churkin, second secretary of the Soviet Embassy in Washington, testifying pefore a House of Repr mittee Thursday, was asked whether the fire had been put out. He said, "I don't know, dded: "The accident is not over with. That is clear. We have not told other countries that everything is OK and they can relax." The U.S. Agriculture Department said shifting winds were carrying a radioactive plume from the stricken plant over the rich farmland of the western Ukraine and into Romania, Hungary, eastern Czechoslovakia and Austria. Poland reported less fallout than in previous days, but said radioactivity levels in water and soil remained high.

The Soviet government said only: "Efforts to implement a complex of technical measures continued at the Chernobyl nuclear power station (NPS) in the duration of April 30. The radioactivity on the territory of the NPS and the NPS' settlement dropped

"Work is under way to deactivate the contaminated areas adjacent to the NPS ter-

"Medical assistance is administered to those affected, of whom 18 people are in serious condition. There are no foreign citizens among those affected."

The "settlement" is Pripyat, a town of 25,000 built at the plant site. A Foreign Ministry official in Red Square for the parade said a news conference would be held when more information became available, but added that he could not predict when that would be. Officially, the casualty toll is two dead and 197 injured, but Secretary of State George P.

Shultz said it was higher "by good measure." An Israeli amateur radio operator in Tel Aviv said a Soviet ham told him there were 300 casualties, but how many ware dead was not clear. David Ben-Bassat said the Soviet ham operator told him Wednesday that he lived 30 miles north of the reactor and "nobody drinks the water. We are afraid." The Soviet Union's first public mention of any effect on other countries came in a report Thursday by the official news agency See RADIATION, Page 12

By The Associated Press TOPEKA - Saying he wanted to save lives and money spent caring for "those who don't have common sense," Gov. John Carlin on Thursday signed into law a bill which requires Kansas motorists to buckle up when they are riding in the front seat of passenger cars and pickup trucks.

"I've been involved in two accidents in the past few years and I truly believe in the value of seat belts," Carlin said at a brief signing ceremony attended by some 15 lobbyists and law enforcement agency officials who pushed the measure through the Legislature.

"There's no question that if we have a law it will be helpful and save lives. The law will be an extra incentive for those who need incentive to wear their belts.'

Carlin requested the law prior to the 1986 session and others pushing for the proposal included the nation's automobile manufacturers who are trying to avoid putting expensive passive restraints, such as air bags, into new cars built in 1990

The law, which will take effect July 1 upon publication in state statute books, was the subject of furious lobbying and heated debate during the 1986 legislative session.

Supporters hailed the idea because it would save lives and state tax dollars spent caring for Carlin signs seatbelt bill into law people seriously injured in traffic accidents. Opponents criticized the measure as another example of governmental intrusion into private lives and made it a personal liberty issue.

In addition, opponents objected to the state lawmakers jumping every time the federal government issues a mandate, such as the 55 mph speed limit.

"I sign this without hesitation," Carlin told the group assembled for the ceremony. "I'm confident that many families across Kansas will thank you all for years to

Professor's remarks spur ag rally

By DIXIE GLANVILLE Collegian Reporter

Members of the American Agricultural Movement railied on campus Thursday to inform students and protest statements made by a University professor.

The rally, beginning in front of the Union, was organized to educate young people about AAM's views and to approach Barry Flinchbaugh, professor of agricultural economics, about statements he made to the media. Flinchbaugh has been quoted as saying that 70 percent of farmers are "weathering the storm." Stephen Anderson, state AAM spokesman and farmer from Alma, led the rally. He called many of the Flinchbaugh's statements "frivolous and false.

"Flinchbaugh has said that 70 percent of the farmers are doing quite well; I'd call him damn fool," Anderson said during the rally.

Rally participants also wanted to bring their case to

"The bureaucrats are untouchable, so we wanted to reach the young people to educate them about the farm problems," said Jean Bergner, Pratt.

"We would like to get people educated as to where the real wealth of the country lays and we would like to get some changes made in the economic systems that are taught," said Eddie Petrowsky, Pratt, alternate state AAM spokesman. In his opening statement, Anderson compared the loss of farmers to the loss of the space shuttle crew. He said the number of suicides in one northwest Kansas county was higher than the number lost in the shuttle accident, yet they are mourned less,

The biggest mistake farmers have made over the last 10 years is that they've listened to the experts too much," said Fred Bentley, representative from the Kansas Rural Center, a holline for farmers.

"We need to start asking ourselves 'How are the farm licies working?' and we need to question these trends that the experts advise us about," Bentley said.

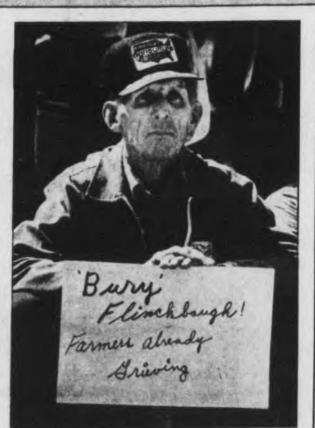

Politicians are looking toward the land-grant colleges, but the facts they are getting are misleading, said Larry Matlack, president of the state AAM, Inc., part of the national organization.

"We (the AAM) would rather have our neighbor than our neighbor's land," Anderson said.

Bruce Larkin, Baileyville farmer and a member of the Northeast Kansas Farm Advocate Network, spoke about issues the network had supported in the Legislature. The issues included the "save the home quarter bill," proposed by State Treasurer Joan Finney, R-Topeka, and Senate Bill 696, a three-year quasi-moratorium giving borrowers additional time to repay loans.

"We didn't win the war, but feel we won a few small battles - we'll be back next year," Larkin said.

Anderson said he believes the people who have taken Flinchbaugh's advice are now broke or are going broke. John Vogelsberg, Home, organic farmer, said he questions whether today's type of agriculture is sustainable when the fertilizer comes from other countries.

"It's time we start using our heads to find cheaper ways to produce crops. Organic farming can't lend itself to factory farming because of the amount of land you can handle," Vogelsberg said.

Darrell Ringer, Gove County farmer, said "We haven't even gotten a 'Shucks we goofed' and really 'Shucks we goofed' isn't good enough.

We need to put together an economic department that teaches the economics of resources, people and parity,"

He also praised John Wefald, University presidentelect, who was a keynote speaker at an AAM rally in Ames, Iowa, last spring.

Anderson talked about "soup pot economics." He described this term as producers of the nation furnishing the soup and economists, like Flinchbaugh, providing the

"Half of these people are just mad because they've lost their farms," said Julie Swanson, senior in animal sciences and industry. "But when people say 'These people should go home and work and then they wouldn't be in the shape they are,' it's just not true. Even the people who are at home working are still losing out. "The pessimism started in the ag econ department before it moved to the farm. Now the economists have moved to a more optimistic outlook," Swanson said.

At the rally's conclusion, the members marched behind

Facility to store toxic wastes

By The Collegian Staff

Because of pressure from the Environmental Protection Agency, low level nuclear and chemical hazardous wastes will be stored in a permanent University facility located north of Kimball Avenue, said G.V. Salts, fifth-year senior in architecture and member of the Advisory Committee on Campus Development. The committee made the decision to construct a facility during its meeting Thursday afternoon. The tentative date for construction is set for the fall. "It became obvious to the EPA that we needed a permanent structure," Salts said.

He said the move would be more in keeping with EPA guidelines for

The wastes are materials from chemistry labs and the nuclear reactor research facility on campus. The wastes are currently being stored in double-walled containers in a temporary trailer on the proposed new facility site.

"The main reason we picked this site is because low level radiation containers are already buried there," Salts said.

He said the containers of chemical wastes buried on the site have been there since 1958.

Some committee members have expressed concern about the location of the waste site, he said. This concern dealt with the nearness of the site to the agronomy and animal sciences facilities. "The campus is obviously growing to the north," Salts said, "and the existing burial site will always be a pro-

"Due to cost it's not something we can just pick up and move tomorrow. Future campus development will have to be designed around it," he

The building will be made of concrete slabs and corrugated metal, Salts said. It is considered a shortterm storage site because the waste is picked up once a year and taken to a permanent storage site. Salts said K-State doesn't have any set environmental guidelines on where to store its nuclear waste, but the University is currently working to adopt some guidelines. The EPA checks the waste site every five or six months to test the surrounding water .

Millions protest against apartheid

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - Millions of blacks stayed away from jobs and schools Thursday, crippling factories, mines and stores in the largest anti-apartheid protest in South African history.

The nationwide strike, demanding in part that May Day be declared a national holiday, signaled a powerful new organizational strength among black workers, students and civic groups in the cam-

An academic monitoring group said at least 1.5 million workers, and possibly many more, struck for the day in the nation's four largest cities alone. A government spokesman also estimated at least 1 million urban black students boycotted classes for the day.

Beyond those 2.5 million strikers, there was no way to calculate how many others left school and work for the day in rural areas and the nation's 10 tribal homelands, scenes of turmoil in recent months.

The national Associated Chambers of Commerce reported "massive absence from work" across the country, ranging from 70 to 100 percent. The black workforce is estimated at more than 6 million in a population of 24 million.

Both Vincent Brett, manpower director for the chamber, and Professor Eddie Webster, head of the academic monitor group, agreed the strike was the largest ever in South Africa.

In Port Elizabeth in eastern Cape Province, researcher Glen Adler said a survey of 86 companies showed that just six of 11,000 black employees turned up.

Officials close 4th bank for 1986

TOPEKA - Officials declared the Bank of Nortonville insolvent Thursday, but in the second use of a new state law designed to retain financial services in one-bank towns, the failed bank was scheduled to reopen Friday as a branch of a nearby institution.

Alan Whitney, a spokesman for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., said the Bank of Nortonville, about 30 miles north of Lawrence in northeast Kansas, would reopen as a branch of the Valley Fallsbased Kendall State Bank

Whitney said the failed bank's depositors automatically would become depositors in the Kendall State Bank, which paid the FDIC a purchase premium of $216,100. The FDIC was named receiver of the Bank of Nortonville, which had assets totaling $6.8 million, after State Banking Commissioner Eugene Barrett Jr. declared the bank insolvent. "The insolvent condition of the Bank of Nortonville is generally attributable to changing economic conditions," Barrett said in an FDIC statement issued from Washington.

The Nortonville bank became the fourth bank insolvency in the state and the 38th in the nation this year.

Fuel output high despite low prices

TOPEKA - Despite falling petroleum prices, oil production in the state decreased by about only 316,000 barrels - or 0.42 percent - to 75.4 million barrels during 1985, the Kansas Corporation Commission announced Thursday.

Meanwhile, output of natural gas rose about 10 percent during the year to 517.2 billion cubic feet, the KCC said.

However, numbers on "intents to drill" produced the most ominous statistics for the year. The KCC reported filings of intent to drill documents with the commission dropped 27 percent during 1985. Only 9,685 intents to drill were filed with the KCC, down from the 13,263 filed during 1984.

Kansas oil production peaked in 1956 at 124 million barrels, then experienced a 22-year decline until 1978, when the output bottomed out at 56.6 million barrels.

Although slightly below the 1984 total 75.7 million barrels, production was still 18.8 million barrels above the 1978 level, according to a KCC statement. Daily production for the year averaged about 206,500 barrels, compared to the 1984 average of 207,000.

Natural gas production increased for the third straight year, 47 billion cubic feet greater than the 1984 production of 470 billion cubic feet, and nearly 84 billion cubic feet more than the 433 billion record-

VANCOUVER, Wash. - Steam and ash spewed from Mount St. Helens Thursday and drifted as far as 25 miles north of the volcano,

The steam burst occurred at 2:26 a.m., said Steve Brantley, a U.S. Geological Survey geologist at the volcano observation center in Van-

The southwest Washington volcano has belched steam 50 times since it broke a 10-month quiet period with a steam burst April 15, Brantley said.

The mountain is not erupting during these events because no new molten rock has moved up in the volcano, Brantley said.

The volcano's explosive May 18, 1980, eruption covered the Morton area under several inches of ash. The eruption leveled 230 square miles of timber, claimed 57 lives and sent up an ash cloud that circled the globe.

Senate approves $1 trillion budget

WASHINGTON - The Republican-led Senate defied President Reagan early Friday by passing a $1 trillion fiscal 1987 budget blueprint calling for a $13 billion tax increase and $19 billion less than Reagan wanted for the Pentagon.

By a bipartisan 66-29 vote shortly after midnight, the Senate gave preliminary approval to the compromise package for the fiscal year beginning Oct. 1 that meets a required deficit target of $144 billion. The Senate then routinely gave the package final approval on a 70-25

The House, which had been waiting to see what the Senate would do, is expected to move ahead on its version of the package next week

There was no immediate reaction from the president, who was heading for a seven-nation economic summit in Tokyo.

Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., said that he had spoken with White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan. Dole quoted Regan as saying the president would issue a statement saying he was disappointed about the tax increases, the Pentagon cut and the fact that there was not more reduction in domestic spending.

But, Dole added, the president would give "some indication he appreciates the fact the Senate has met its responsibilities.'

Former president grants pardons

WEST POINT, N.Y. - Former President Ford pardoned a cheering crowd of about 4,000 West Point cadets of minor conduct infractions, a move that removed obstacles to graduation for some of them, a spokesman said.

Ford's speech Wednesday night touched on his controversial pardon of President Nixon in the Watergate scandal. Later, a cadet's question about amnesty, brought the cheering cadets to their feet.

By tradition, any head of state or former head of state has the right to relieve U.S. Military Academy cadets from punishment incurred for minor violations.

Capt. William Morgan, an academy spokesman, said some cadets might not have been able to graduate without Ford's pardon. He said the last time a visitor granted pardons at West Point may have been 10 years ago.

Fire destroys singer's gold records

LOS ANGELES - Tony Butala, lead singer of The Lettermen, crawled through dense smoke to escape a fire at his new home that inflicted more than $500,000 damage, authorities said.

Butala was unhurt in the blaze that broke out in a clothes dryer about 6:15 p.m. Wednesday at his home in suburban Woodland Hills, but said nine framed gold records in his den were destroyed.

The records included the trio's 1960s and early '70s hits "Goin' Out of My Head," "Hurts So Bad," and "Summer Place." Also destroyed were antique music boxes, musical instruments and other valuables.

Senate opposes transcript fee increase

Deciding "which pocket to pull the funds from" is what Don Foster, University registrar, said he has to decide each time a bill comes to his

Foster addressed Student Senate Thursday night after a resolution was introduced by Student Body President Steven Johnson, sophomore in agricultural economics, in opposition to a transcript fee increase from $1 to $2 after July 1.

The registrar, along with William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services, said the increase would make line schedules free for students. The increase was needed, Foster said, because the Union could no longer afford to subsidize the cost of the line schedules.

Both the line schedules and the transcripts come from the office of the registrar, Foster said, but the Union has been footing the bill.

The cost is estimated to be $16,822 to produce the line schedules with the Registrar rallies senate to raise fees total revenue if all of the line schedules are sold, netting the Union $13,872. In addition, Walt Smith, Union director, said not all of the schedules are sold.

The Kansas Board of Regents approved the transcript increase on first reading at its April 18 meeting. The resolution, which was approved by senate, will be sent to the University administration and presented at the next Regents meeting, Johnson

Foster explained to senate that the money he allocates in the registrar's office comes from both the state other operating expenses and transcript fees.

From this budget, Foster said, he also provides verification for student loan deferments, grade checks for insurance purposes and other student

The budget Foster presented senate showed a total expense in the fiscal year for transcripts at $49,574. The projected budget for 1987 is $80,000. The budget also provides costs for postage if mid-term grades are mailed.

Sally Traeger, senate chairwoman and senior in marketing, asked Foster if the reason the increase was needed was because of state budget

"Yes, I am saying that the provision of transcripts is a proper part of the registrar's office," he said. "I'm also saying the provision of class schedules is part of the registrar's office and if I say that they are part of the registrar's office, I have to say that state funding will not cover all of

Traeger also asked Foster if the transcript services will be affected if the increase is not given. He said "something will have to give," and that he would probably cut out some of the immediate services, such as being able to get transcripts processed in a day or

Foster said one-third of the 40,000 transcripts issued each year are provided to currently enrolled students, but the other two-thirds are provided to students who are former K-State students or alumni.

Johnson expressed some concern that the budget provided for $9,500 for office modules. He said this was a capital expense and should be provided through state funds

After senate adjourned, Traeger said she and Johnson were going to type a formal letter explaining the legislation senate passed and giving specific reasons behind the opposi-

"In our letter, we are going to include those questions that are very much unanswered at this point. He (Foster) was able to justify a few of the categories of the budget, but as to the legitimacy of their totals we are not sure.

"The one thing that bothers me most is, in essence, it indicates that state funds available are insufficient and that students are being asked to make up the difference.

"What was really brought out in discussion is that it all comes back to recruitment and enrollment. I can't speak strongly enough of the importance of recruitment at K-State...if enrollment was not decreasing we would not find ourselves with this

'I can see where something needs to be done, but obviously, to me, a 100 percent increase in their budget is not the answer," Traeger said.

Student Senate voted Thursday night to increase the tentative allocation to Sports Club Council $439.20 to $2313.60.

The amendment to the original allocation, sponsored by Matt Queen, sophomore in chemical science, reinstated funds to rugby, and men's and women's soccer. Men's soccer received $789, women's soccer received $625, and rugby received $680. Sailing, fencing and parachute clubs will receive the $73.20 amount previously allocated.

During debate, Martin Monto, junior in biology, said senate needed to determine why the new proposal differed from the one senate rejected April 24.

"We need to distinguish between these sports clubs and say why these deserve funding over the other ones," he said.

Eirene Tatham, junior in construction science, said the rugby team deserved the money provided in the allocation.

"Our football team really sucks and yet they get all the money they want," she said. "The rugby team is ranked in the top 10 in the nation, I would say that is a recruitment factor for K-State and they should get our money." Caroline Peine, instructor at the Center for Student Development, said funding the clubs now might lead to more requests in the

"We allocated the money from the $700,000 to get the job done for KSDB. Well, things have changed a bit and now we need to give them the rest of the money to finish the job," said Steve Ligon, junior in animal sciences and industry and chairman of Finance Committee.

Senate approved the appointment of several students and senators to the Athletic Fee Task Force Committee, set up to research the feasibility of an athletic fee.

Postmasters to walk for research

By BOB OLSON Collegian Reporter

Postmasters usually walk to deliver the mail, but Saturday they will walk across Kansas to raise funds for cancer research.

The postmasters will take part in a walk for the "Donald Marrs Cancer Research Fund," beginning at 2 p.m. Saturday. The walkathon will begin at the east end of Ackert Hall, the site of the Center for Basic Cancer Research, and will end at the Holidome in Hutchinson, the site of the Postmasters' State Convention.

Terry Johnson, professor of biology and director of the Division of Biology and the Center for Basic Cancer Research, will lead off the first leg of the 131-mile trek to Hutchinson. Johnson will be joined by faculty, staff, students and friends of the University's cancer center.

Postmasters and other supporters across the state will be starting the journey in their own areas at approximately the same time, Johnson said. Some of them are gathering pledges for the cause, he said. Many of them will travel to Hutchinson for the convention after the walkathon.

Donald Marrs is a letter carrier and a cancer victim. He walked more than 2,200 miles in 1981 from Carlyle, Ill. to the San Francisco Bay hasize the need for intensified cancer research. Marrs' journey took him through Kansas where he had an opportunity to meet many postal employees.

Marilyn Miller, postmaster at Pomona, said Marrs' goal was to carry the flame of hope for other cancer victims and "to reach just one person, touch just one life."

K-State alumnus John Keltz, postmaster of Galesburg, learned of Marrs' bout with cancer and his walk across the United States. Prompted by a dual concern for Marrs' physical efforts, and a concern for the programs at the Center for Basic Cancer Research, Keltz contacted three other Kansas postmasters to initiate a statewide fund drive among postal employees in Kansas to honor Marrs.

"As a result of a unified effort by Kansas postmasters, we have established a cancer fund at the center in honor of Don," Keltz said. "We believe that the walkathon is symbolic of Don's 'Marathon of many. The Center for Basic Cancer Research is the only one of its kind, because it is not located with a medical center, Johnson said.

"When the National Cancer Institute heard about us (the cancer research center), they sent a team of scientists to check us out," he said.

"They interviewed everyone on the staff and faculty and several students. The team was so impressed with our methods that the institute funded a grant to train the cancer biologists at K-State," Johnson said.

"These kinds of programs allow us to attract Ph.D. candidates from all over the United States to come and study here. The money amounts to about $200,000 for a four-year period, and is used to pay for tuition and research and to bring in consultants to talk to students about their cancerresearch programs. It all revolves around the students' expenses," Johnson said.

Undergraduate students are assisted through private donations Miller said she hoped the walk that go into the "Donald Marrs would serve as encouragement and Cancer Research Fund," he said.

Farmers, economists need communication

economy was aptly expressed during a campus rally sponsored by the American Agricultural Movement Thursday.

The rally came after statements made by Barry Flinchbaugh, professor of agricultural economics, that 70 percent of the state's farmers were "weathering the storm."

Depending on one's definition, farmers may be surviving the slump in agriculture, but survival is not the same as making a living. Farmers could be living at subsistence levels and be blems as they refer to the small, "weathering the storm," but this does not mean their plight should be ignored or reduced in impor-

The frustration and anger felt them to be poor advice from by Kansas farmers regarding the agricultural economics professtate's declining agricultural sionals, and it is commendable that they brought the issue to campus to confront Flinchbaugh personally.

> Communication between farmers and economists is needed if problems are to be solved. Farmers need to seek out professional advice and then weigh its merits as it applies to them. They should realize that what works for their neighbors does not necessarily work for them.

> At the same time, economists should consider agricultural proindependent farmer, and not only to agribusiness corporations.

Ex-officials abuse political contacts

Washington is so beautiful in this season that it hardly seems reasonable for the president of the United States to be half a world away. The dogwoods and azaleas have painted the White House neighborhood with a palette any artist would envy. The lilacs are perfuming the air.

In other respects, however, Ronald Reagan may have few regrets about escaping the atmosphere of the capital. Senate Republicans are writing a budget he will not like. The Senate Finance Committee is making a hash of his tax-reform bill. House Democrats remain stubbornly unconvinced of the wisdom of his Nicaraguan policy. And investigators on Capitol Hill and a dozen news organizations are circling around Michael K. Deaver.

As much as the president may care about his budget, tax and Nicaraguan policies, it's safe to guess he is most offended by the treatment of Deaver. Of all the personal aides who have served him over the last 20 years, none has been more loyal and none more esteemed by both Ronald and Nancy Reagan than the former White House deputy chief of staff and public relations adviser.

When Deaver resigned last year to re-enter private business, he kept his White House pass and remained on the exclusive list of those who receive the president's full daily schedule. When charges began to circulate that Deaver's lobbying was violating the law restricting ex-officials' dealings with people and issues they managed in their government days, Reagan proclaimed his "utmost faith" in Deaver's probity.

But the issue will not go away. Instead, it has revived the charge that there has been a pattern of flagrant conflicts of interest among a great many of the men and women DAVID BRODER Syndicated Columnist who came to Washington in his administra-

To conservatives, these charges are simply further evidence that the "Washington Establishment" will try to repulse the Reaganites by hook or by crook. They are right in suggesting that the merchandising of influence and access did not begin on the day Jimmy Carter left town.

Long before the Reaganites came, there were well-established and successful Democratic law firms with partners who did little but arrange fund-raisers for members of Congress. There were ex-cabinet members and ex-senators who drew sixfigure salaries for giving elegant lunches and dinners for their firms' clients and their old friends on Capitol Hill and the White House

Some of these folks have acquired such a patina of respectability, not to mention prosperity, that only the old-timers remember they were hungry young lawyers or publicrelations men when a president or a powerful senator launched them into their new world of influence. All of this was going on before Reagan's time and will continue, I am sure, when he has gone to the ranch.

What is striking now is the brazenness of the commercializaion of contacts, the absolutely unabashed exploitation of government service for private gain. It is this which is different and disturbing to many of the old Washington hands - Republicans as well and Democrats.

One of them - a former Republican legislator and cabinet officer - recalled that a friend of ours had won a Pulitzer Prize for exposing and forcing the resignation of a service secretary in the Kennedy administration who had been soliciting business for his old company on his official stationery. "Nowadays," he said, "they'd think that he was just getting the jump on the competition.

It is patently false, in my judgment, to suggest that Republicans are especially prone to cash in on their government service. To cite but one example, former Rep. Barber B. Conable Jr., of New York, who had been the ranking Republican on the House Ways and Means Committee, last year turned his back on huge retainers, because he did not want to lobby his former colleagues.

But Conable was no Reaganite, and it is not easy to dismiss the comment of Charles L. Dempsey, inspector general of the scandalplagued Environmental Protection Agency and the Department of Housing and Urban Development during Reagan's first term. He told The Washington Post's Howard Kurtz, "This administration is loaded with guys bringing the business morality to Washington, and some of them never learn. It's like they flunked a course in basic civics.' The greatest political burden for Republicans - the counterpart to the Democrats' reputation for profligacy - is the suspicion of unchecked selfishness. Many voters still think Republicans practice the politics of greed. Reagan has erased many blemishes on his party's portrait. He's done little so far to cure this one.

1986 graduates to face 'real world' conditions

Time is closing in on everyone as the semester comes to a close.

I wish I had paid more attention to the little details. The other night I was waiting for sleep to overtake me, and I heard a sound it took me a few moments to identify - it was the breeze rustling leaves on the trees. Leaves are back, but I was taking them for

With the end of college comes the sudden realization that society sees we graduates as "ready for the real world." Are we? It's a scary proposition in many ways; in others it is tremendously exciting. On the one hand, all the information absorbed throughout the years is now to be applied - for money, no less. However, what happens if we forget something we were supposed to have learned, and our employment hinges on it?

Confidence in education is a wonderful thing, but how many graduates in the Class of 1986 are so sure of their retention that they don't worry a little about getting a "real

Many people have tried to explain the complex mix of emotions that surface in a graduate, and most have failed. I suspect the best summation might be "bewilderment." Not only is it a whole new ball game when looking for that first job, but sometimes it is difficult to understand that a behavior pattern practiced for the last 18 years is about to be unlearned in one fell swoop: going to

ty. Isn't there a contribution to be made - indeed, expected of each of us - or is it merely a grind to be endured for the next 50 years?

There is more to it than just work. Perhaps the Class of 1986 is still young enough and honest enough to have a few ideals. Not only the grand plans of world peace and prosperity - ideals that all too often fall by the wayside because they are unattainable - but ideal views of where each of us should be in our relation to fellow men, the world and

These personal ideals are the fruit of education. Not only the techniques of marketing, writing, circuit design and soil management, but the ethics of business, the arts of writing, the logic of circuit design and the symbiotic relationship of man and earth are what we must gather from school.

Without these elements, an education is incomplete. Ethics and choice are what set humanity above the animals. A machine may be programmed, but only a human be-

Labels prove deceptive for humans

I used to think labels were an enormous asset until I went grocery shopping one day. When I walked through the doors of my hometown supermarket, I suddenly faced a conglomeration of meat, beverages, fruit, bread, candy, frozen dinners - in other words, everything man's ingenuity could create to stuff his gullet.

Despite all these tempting delicacies, I was determined to only buy the two cans of cream-style corn I needed to make a casserole for a dinner party that evening.

Because corn is a nice, common vegetable, logic told me the store should have a large selection of brands in a prominent display. You would think that I should have no problem finding it, right?

Dream on, naive person. To capture two small, inoffensive cans of soupy vegetables I first had to plow through a jungle of mothers pushing their screaming brats in shopping carts, "bargain" displays on every corner and aisle after aisle of aluminum racks.

To facilitate the process of tracking down this lone item, I scanned the horizon for a sign pointing in the general direction of canned vegetables. In the far corner dangled a small sign with "corn," or something similar to that, scribbled on it.

Elated at my discovery, I tripped lightly over to the aisle only to find there were no shelves containing cans of corn, only bins containing corn on the cob.

Wary of being deceived again, I scoured the store until I happened upon the canned corn display. Now that I had found my treasure, I simply had to choose the brand for which the recipe called.

Much to my dismay, there were only two cans in the Libby's display - one can labeled 'cream-style corn" and one unlabeled can. Because both cans were together on the shelf, I assumed they both contained creamstyle corn. Gleefully, I dropped them in my basket and wheeled them off to the check-out

When I opened the cans at home, I found that once again I had been deceived. Instead of buying two cans of corn, I had paid for one can of spinach and one can of green beans.

By now it was too late to make another trip to the store, so I substituted these ingredients for the corn and took my concoction to the party. Needless to say, it was not the hit of the party.

I had never realized how important labels were to our society until this episode. Labels provide a way to categorize objects so society can identify them easily and know some of their basic characteristics.

Although the concept of labeling was originally designed to apply to products, human beings apply this concept to themselves.

Labels on cans of food identify the basic ingredients of a product and indicate which cans should be grouped together. Society uses labels to group people according to the different characteristics or traits they may

We brand people by age, race, sex, profession, nationality, by what they eat, the clothes they wear, the perfume or aftershave they buy, by their walk, their accent and

While some of these items may be useful for statistical information, the others are personal qualities people decided were important identifiers for making quick evaluations of individuals.

The problem is that when we group people by these visible distinctions, we often put the wrong label on a person.

If an individual associates with a particular group of people, we may assume that individual's personality, ideals, and aspirations are clones of the others. In reality he or she may enjoy their company but disagree with their beliefs.

Or if a friend of ours has already labeled a person, we will accept that label without question. Not until this proves false do we start to define the individual. By then it may be too late to salvage the situation.

Instead of looking at the personality behind the individual, humans let themselves be distracted by extraneous information. This is a dangerous formula to follow, because faulty information or unusual situations can lead to incorrect evaluations. People should become acquainted with the individual and avoid labeling a person based on extraneous material. Labels are an efficient way of categorizing objects, but not people. Instead of simplifying a situation, they may complicate a problem beyond

Two home runs late in the fourth inning proved to be the margin of victory in Thursday's Co-Rec All-University softball game as the Fanatics beat the Unknowns, 6-2, at L.P. Washburn softball fields.

A home run by Roger Davis and another home run by Joe Fultz were the telling blows for the Fanatics.

The Fanatics were unable to generate any offense until late in the third inning, when they scored two runs due to defensive mistakes by the Unknowns' infield.

Sixteen colts enter in Kentucky Derby

By The Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. - Snow Chief, a battle-hardened little colt from California, will oppose 15 other 3-year-olds Saturday in the 112th Kentucky Derby at Churchill Downs.

The son of modest parentage was made the early 6-5 favorite Thursday to beat back a bunch of blue-blooded challengers and become the fourth California-bred to win the 1 1/4-mile Derby.

Decidedly, in 1962, was the last Californian to wear the blanket of roses. The other two were Morvich in 1922 and Swaps in 1955.

Snow Chief has been racing once a month since November, and in that period he has won five straight

Three of Snow Chief's challengers for the $609,400 winner's share of a Derby record purse of $784,400 will be Badger Land, Bold Arrangement and Broad Brush.

Badger Land, the second early choice at 3-1, chased Snow Chief across the finish in their first four meetings. Snow Chief won three of those races, including the Florida Derby in which Badger Land was second.

Bold Arrangement, an Englishbred colt listed at 12-1, will be trying to become the third English-bred winner of the Kentucky Derby. The two winners were Omar Khayyam in 1917 and Tomy Lee in 1959. Neither raced in England.

Broad Brush did not arrive at Churchill Downs until 6 a.m. Thursday after a 12-hour van trip from Pimlico in Baltimore.

The front-running colt, who is cothird choice with the stretch-running Mogambo, has won four straight and seven of his last eight starts.

Also entered Thursday were the gelding Bachelor Beau, Rampage, Ferdinand, Vernon Castle, Wheatly Hall, Groovy, Fobby Forbes, Wise Times, Icy Groom, Zabaleta and Southern Appeal.

Each starter will carry 126 pounds. Posttime is 5:38 p.m. EDT, with ABC to televise from 4:30 pm. to 6 p.m.

Snow Chief, ridden by Alex Solis, is owned by Californians Carl Grinstead, a former trainer, and Ben Rochelle, who once formed a comedy dance team with his late wife.

Snow Chief won five of nine starts in 1985 and earned $935,740, a record for a 2-year-old. He opened 1986 by winning the seven-furlong California Breeders Championship, then became the 79th and youngest equine millionaire by winning the 11-16-mile Florida Derby.

K-State track team to travel to Iowa

By TOM PERRIN Sports Editor

The Big Eight Conference Track and Field Meet is two weeks away, but Coach Steve Miller already has his team looking ahead.

K-State will compete in the Veishea Invitational, the last meet before to the Big Eight Conference meet, Saturday at Ames, Iowa.

"We're going there (Ames) to get some specific work done," Miller said. "It's not necessarily a tune-up. It's more important than a tune-up. But it's not the Big Eight meet. The Big Eight meet is our priority now, and that's what were pointing to in a couple of weeks."

K-State will take next weekend off to prepare for the Big Eight meet, which is scheduled for May 16-17 at Boulder, Colo.

Miller said the season has been going "a little better than I anticipated.

"I don't think it's a secret to anyone that we don't have great team depth. We don't have the numbers some schools do. But certainly no school in our conference and maybe the nation has as many good people as we have. We have a lot of talented individuals."

Some top K-State performers will not be competing in their specialties Saturday, but this does not apply to high jumpers Rita Graves and Brad Speer. Both Graves and Speer are coming off victories last weekend at the Drake Relays in Des Moines, Iowa. Graves jumped 6-01/2 to win at door champion in the 300-yard dash.

Drake, while Speer cleared 7-31/2 for his victory.

Neither member of K-State's 5,000-meter run NCAA qualifying duo of Jacque Struckhoff and Chris Vanatta will be competing in that race Saturday. Struckhoff will run the 1,500 meters while Vanatta will run at 3,000 meters.

Record-setting long jumper and triple jumper Kenny Harrison won't compete in either jump event Saturday and will instead compete in the 200-meter dash.

While injury and illness problems have bothered some members of the team at various points in the season, namely women's sprinters Michelle Maxey, Anita Isom and Karen Brown, those problems appear to be over for now.

'We're as healthy as we've been all year long," Miller said. "We don't appear to have any major problems. We still have some nagging injuries, but nothing at all of any major consequence. Everybody is healthy."

TRACK NOTES: K-State placed three members on the Academic All-Big Eight team. Anne Stadler, Vanatta and Struckhoff all were named. Stadler and Struckhoff both have 4.0 grade point averages and Vanatta has a 3.1....Another junior college signee has been added to new Coach John Capriotti's list -Georgia Gibson, a sprinter from Barton County Community College. ## Adding soccer way for K-State to earn respect and money thing the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics is looking to do.

After canning the softball and men's tennis teams earlier in the year, Athletic Director Larry Travis most likely doesn't want to add another team, but that is what I think the department should do.

K-State seems to be constantly retreating. If it's not one thing it's another, and K-State usually comes up on the short end of the stick. Now an opportunity to charge forward is waiting to be grabbed.

If the athletic department would adopt soccer, K-State would be presented with the a great chance to build a winning program and have a premiere playing facility.

Softball and men's tennis were removed from the department's budget because new National Collegiate Athletic Association

Adding another sport is probably the last rules allow a school to only carry 14 teams to be considered Division I.

The athletic department stated when it cut out the two sports in March that due to poor financing it was in the best interests of the entire department to limit the number of funded teams. Assistant Athletic Director Steve Miller also said he hoped that when the department's budget is more stable that it would be possible to pick the sports up again, or adopt some new ones. Well, the chance to be a progressive department sits before them. I hope that the powers that be would look into adopting soccer as a new official K-State sport as soon as it is possible.

Not only does K-State already have a well established soccer club from which to build a team, but the University is also in a unique position for maintaining a playing facility. By renovating Memorial Stadium into a soccer field, the University would have a beautiful playing field for a team which would likely have some success.

Members of the tennis and softball teams probably are not pleased with talk of other sports before their dead sports have even had a chance to turn cold, but soccer does have one unique quality their sports lacked. A soccer team - unlike softball, tennis or many sports K-State still does fund - has the potential of being a revenue generator.

Of course money is a great problem for the athletic department.

As the department is realizing, every cent helps. Some schools - such as Nebraska can't lose, because many of its smaller sports generate revenue.

At this time, though, K-State only gains revenue from football and men's basketball. Baseball is beginning to break through and make a few dollars, and in the future with a better win-loss record the team will raise even more money.

It is important that K-State sponsor sports with revenue-generating potential. Soccer offers exactly that opportunity.

On top of that, soccer is a very inexpensive sport. Give a team uniforms, balls and funding for coaches, travel and groundskeeping and the squad is set. K-State most likely won't act on this proposal too soon, but it is does make sense to look into the feasibility of adopting soccer. Prior planning would make it very easy to move when an opportunity does arise. K-State will then show fans, enemies and other schools that the Wildcats are not afraid to go forward and that the athletic department is not so strapped with problems that it can not be progressive.

I know Larry Travis is pinching pennies, but sometimes spending some of those pennies now can make a whole lot more of them in the future.

For every investment, there can be a healthy return. This return not only comes in respect, but in money.

K-State baseball team to close Big Eight play against Cyclones

By The Collegian Staff

The K-State baseball team hooks up with Iowa State this weekend for four games in the last Big Eight Conference dual of the year for the Wildcats.

K-State enters the game on the heels of five game losing streak and is out of contention for the post season tournament in Oklahoma City. Coach Gary Vaught's Wildcats can move up as far as fifth place in the conference standings, but not up to the coveted fourth spot that is needed to make the tournament. Iowa State currently stands at 5-11 in Big Eight play while the 'Cats are at a disappointing 2-18.

Action begins Friday night with a 7 p.m. contest that is scheduled for nine innings. Saturday's play is scheduled for a pair of seven inning affairs, with the first contest getting under way at 5 p.m. The third game is a nine inning dual with a 12:30 starting time Sunday.

Iowa State enters the contests hoping for a sweep of the series as their postseason playoff hopes are still alive, after they took one game from Oklahoma last weekend.

Staff-to-youth ratio low, report shows

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The Youth Center at Topeka, where 15 employees were attacked during a nine-month period ending in March, has a lower staff-toresident ratio than three other state juvenile detention facilities, a recent governmental audit shows.

In addition, the report by the Legislative Division of Post Audit showed that the most serious attacks on the youth center's staff appeared to be in connection with escape attempts.

The report, which was released late last week, said a total of six attacks at the youth center had resulted in hospital treatment and four of those incidents were in connection with escape attempts.

"These four attacks all occurred during the late night shift when only one staff member was on duty in (each housing) cottage," the report

The Youth Center at Topeka is the state's largest youth rehabilitation and detention facility, generally housing boys from 13 to 18 years old.

The center, which is operated by the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services, had 202 employees, spent $7 million and housed about 200 youths during the budget year that ended last July, the report said.

The center, in northwest Topeka, does not have a security staff and instead uses youth service workers to monitor and supervise students. The center had a ratio of one staff member to 1.9 residents - higher than staff-student ratios at similar youth centers in Atchison, Beloit and Larned, the report said.

In comparison, the Youth Center at Atchison had a staff-student ratio of one to 1.6, the Youth Center at Beloit, one to 1.7, and the Youth Center at Larned, one to 1.5.

Gasoline prices starting to stabilize

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - After dropping 40 cents a gallon since November, gasoline prices began stabilizing in April, the state's fuel allocation analyst said Thursday.

Prices at self-service pumps increased about 2 cents a gallon and remained constant at full-service pumps in April, said Lyle Goltz, fuel analyst for the Kansas Corporation

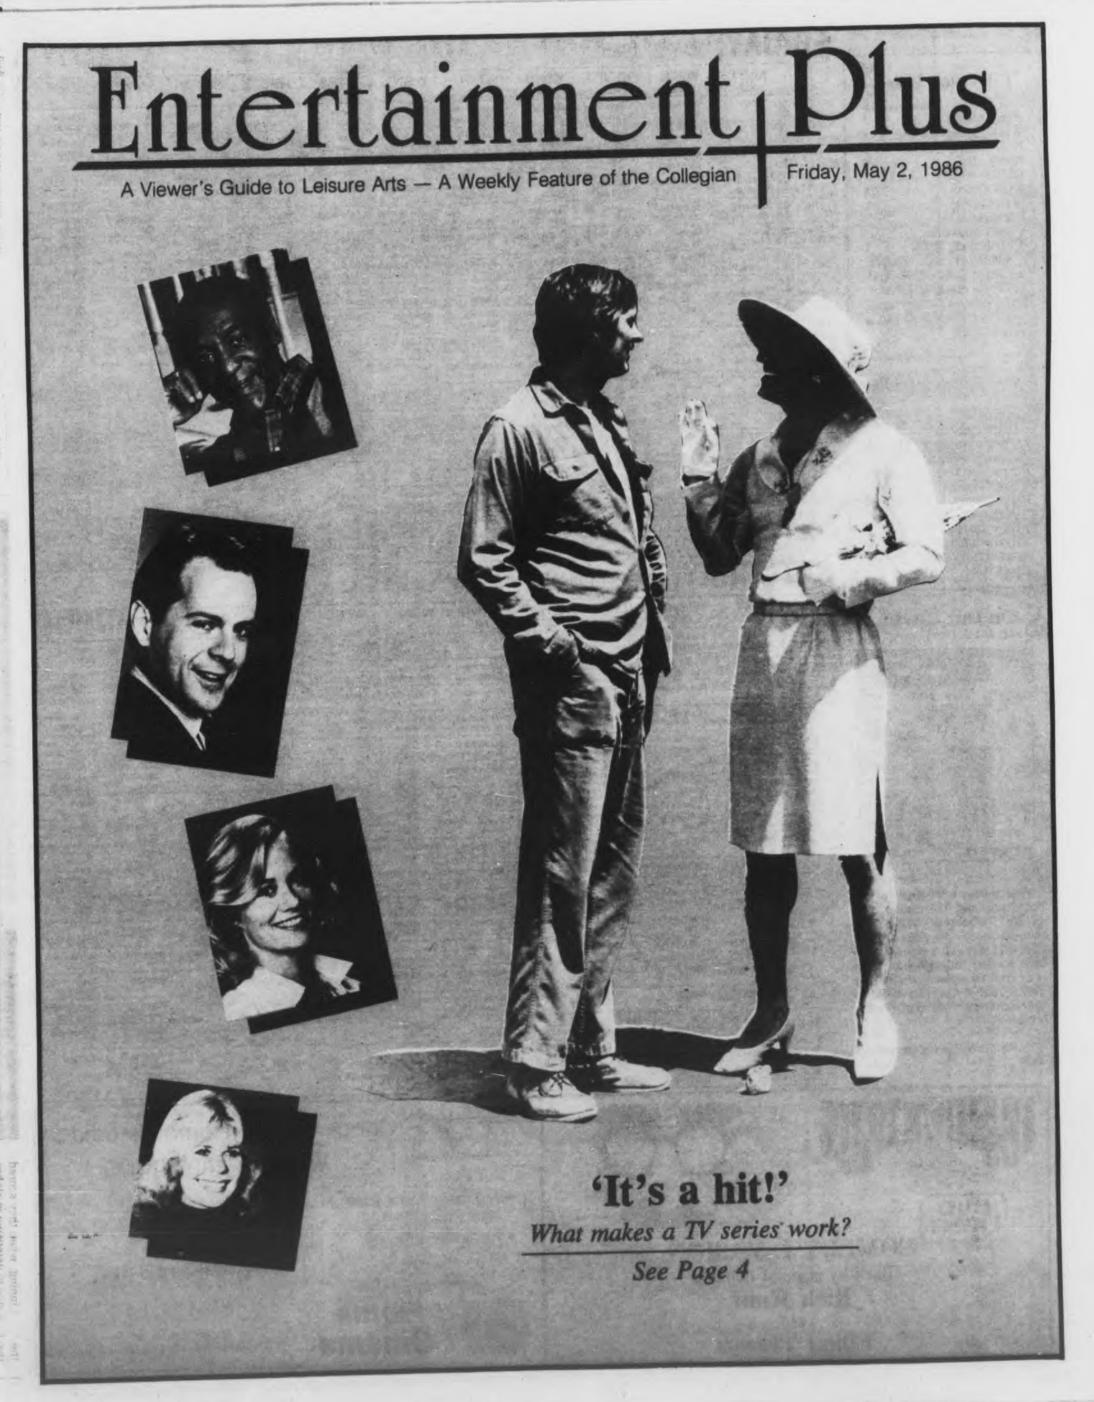

Goltz' monthly survey of gasoline sales outlets statewide showed an average price of 81 cents a gallon for regular leaded gas, 83 cents for regular leaded and 99 cents for premium unleaded at self-service pumps. At full-service pumps, the prices were 96 cents a gallon for regular, 99 cents for regular unleaded and $1.16 for premium unleaded. Diesel fuel is selling for 90 cents a gallon at self-service pumps and 98 cents at full-service pumps, Goltz

"There are no obvious reasons to believe that prices of gasoline or diesel fuel will change much in the next few months," Goltz said. "There is a 27-day supply of gasoline on hand for the nation, which is a rather low inventory, but would be adequate unless lower prices stimulate demand."

In addition, the report by the Legislative Division of Post Audit showed that the most serious attacks on the youth center's staff appeared to be in connection with escape at-

The report, which was released late last week, said a total of six attacks at the youth center had resulted in hospital treatment and four of those incidents were in connection with escape attempts.

"These four attacks all occurred during the late night shift when only one staff member was on duty in (each housing) cottage," the report said.

The Youth Center at Topeka is the state's largest youth rehabilitation and detention facility, generally housing boys from 13 to 18 years old.

The center, which is operated by the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services, had 202 employees, spent $7 million and housed about 200 youths during the budget year that ended last July, the report said.

The center, in northwest Topeka, does not have a security staff and instead uses youth service workers to monitor and supervise students. The center had a ratio of one staff member to 1.9 residents - higher than staff-student ratios at similar youth centers in Atchison, Beloit and Larned, the report said.

In comparison, the Youth Center at Atchison had a staff-student ratio of one to 1.6, the Youth Center at Beloit, one to 1.7, and the Youth Center at Larned, one to 1.5.

Music Review Pablo's roots in reggae are of the purest

By STEVE MILLIGAN Collegian Columnist

Tired of those "downpresser man" reggae lyrics, because they remind you too much of what goes on in Anderson Hall, not to mention Russia, South Africa and Central America? Do you enjoy listening to roots reggae, but get a little saddened at times by all the poems about Babylon?

If so, then "Rebel Rock Reggae: This is Augustus Pablo" may be just right for you.

This re-release of Pablo's works it is the heart and soul of reggae it is the music.

The absence of lyrics on this album is filled in by Pablo's delightful playing of the melodica an instrument almost unheard of in the United States. The songs flow with simple melodies to bring out the emotions which are at the core of Rastafarian culture.

The first side presents some of the best songs on the album. "Please Sunrise" comes across as a strong emotional plea for happiness and peace. "Point Blank" starts off hauntingly with mystifying guitar work, and builds throughout with a powerful bass. "Pablo in Dub" is a pleasant and satisfying exploration of dubbing techniques. The strongest song of all is the cheerful and bouncy "Pretty Baby," which captures the feelings of new found love.

On side two, the thoughtful, pensive sounds of "Skateland Rock" lead into the shifting emotional tones of "Dread Eye." The following three songs present various moods, leading to the uplifting tune "Lover's Mood," which was a minor hit in Jamaica, as was

"Pablo in Dub." The sound of the album, which was recorded during the early '70s in Kingston, Jamaica, is similar to that of Leroy Sibbles and early Bob Marley. The Marley influence may come from the recording sessions in which Pablo performed on keyboard with the Wailer's. Perhaps the best way to get a feel for the album is to listen to KSDB-FM's Midnight Dread at 11 p.m. on Sundays. This is an album which belongs in every serious reggae collection and in not-so-serious col-

two different stages, stage two in Ahearn and stage one in West Stadium.

The musical entertainment lineup for Saturday's events will be

TOPEKA - After dropping 40 cents a gallon since November, gasoline prices began stabilizing in April, the state's fuel allocation analyst said Thursday.

Prices at self-service pumps increased about 2 cents a gallon and remained constant at full-service pumps in April, said Lyle Goltz, fuel analyst for the Kansas Corporation

Goltz' monthly survey of gasoline sales outlets statewide showed an average price of 81 cents a gallon for regular leaded gas, 83 cents for regular leaded and 99 cents for premium unleaded at self-service pumps. At full-service pumps, the prices were 96 cents a gallon for regular, 99 cents for regular unleaded and $1.16 for premium unleaded. Diesel fuel is selling for 90 cents a

"There are no obvious reasons to believe that prices of gasoline or diesel fuel will change much in the next few months," Goltz said. "There is a 27-day supply of gasoline on hand for the nation, which is a rather low inventory, but would be adequate unless lower prices stimulate demand."

Staff-to-youth ratio low, report shows

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The Youth Center at Topeka, where 15 employees were attacked during a nine-month period ending in March, has a lower staff-toresident ratio than three other state iuvenile detention facilities, a recent governmental audit shows.

In addition, the report by the Legislative Division of Post Audit showed that the most serious attacks on the youth center's staff appeared to be in connection with escape attempts.

The report, which was released late last week, said a total of six attacks at the youth center had resulted in hospital treatment and four of those incidents were in connection with escape attempts. "These four attacks all occurred during the late night shift when only one staff member was on duty in (each housing) cottage," the report

The Youth Center at Topeka is the state's largest youth rehabilitation and detention facility, generally housing boys from 13 to 18 years old.

The center, which is operated by the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services, had 202 employees, spent $7 million and housed about 200 youths during the budget year that ended last July, the report said.

The center, in northwest Topeka, does not have a security staff and instead uses youth service workers to monitor and supervise students. The center had a ratio of one staff member to 1.9 residents - higher than staff-student ratios at similar youth centers in Atchison, Beloit and Larned, the report said.

In comparison, the Youth Center at Atchison had a staff-student ratio of one to 1.6, the Youth Center at Beloit, one to 1.7, and the Youth Center at Larned, one to 1.5.

The making of a television hit

ertain television shows 'make it." Others don't. Is it the roll of the dice or a secret formula that makes a show a hit?

Actually, it's a little of both. Bill Adams, associate professor of journalism and mass communications, has researched the question, and has found that some shows are destined to make it Attenti from the day they are conceived, while others are doomed.

There is no secret formula, Adams said, but there are triedand-true situations that have worked in the past.

For example, detectives always come in pairs, Adams said — Rick and A.J. Simon, Remington Steele and Laura Holt.

A combination of special personalities also helps make or break a show, Adams said. The on-again, off-again romance bet-ween "Moonlighting"'s Madeline Hayes and David Addison, for ex-ample, keeps the viewers' in-terest, Adams said.

a Certain gimmicks work well, toss off inside jokes referring to the show's writers and directors. And, Adams admitted, there is what he calls the "X Factor," the creative magic that makes good television. Sometimes it's in the screenwriting, sometimes in the casting; but, Adams said, "It's unpredictable."

Television shows fall into one of three broad classifications: ensemble, serial or episodic. "Hill Street Blues" and "St. Elsewhere" are ensemble shows, with a large cast that shares the starring role, depending on the particular plot. "Hill Street Blues" and "St. Elsewhere" are also serial - that is, the storyline maintains its integrity from week to week, as on soap operas. Episodic shows have less plotline continuity.

new popularity with the advent of "Hill Street Blues," "St. Elsewhere" and small ensembles like "Moonlighting" and "Remington Steele," Adams said, The growth in ensemble-cast shows reflects a growing desire to return to well-written shows with entertaining plotlines.

Adams said certain character types are breaking new ground on elevision. The anti-hero David Addison, for example, is a new type of leading man. His partner, the dominant-female lead typified relationship is part of the show's appeal, Adams said.

"The viewers like the conflict," Adams said. "The people are key to those roles."

Adams cites four requirements for successful characters: chemistry, character growth, identification and credibility. The chemistry between characters on "Moonlighting," "M*A*S*H" and "The Cosby Show" keep dialogue alive and viewers interested. As characters grow and change, the audience is better able to accept them, Adams said. The loss of four major characters from the original "M*A*S*H" ensemble per John McIntyre and Cpl.

(Col. Blake, Major Burns, Trap-

O'Reilly) did not end the show's run, or detract from its populari-Audiences must identify with the character, Adams said, although this is sometimes dangerous for the actor or actress. William Shatner has had a great deal of trouble shedding the Captain Kirk character; Leonard Nimoy wrote a book called "I Am Not Spock." Finally, the character must be believable, at least up to a point. No one has ever met a Vulcan, yet Spock is believable thanks to Nimoy's portrayal.

The characters of David Addison and Maddy Hayes are a case in point. Adams calls the Addison character "well-written but not well-rounded;" David is "always interesting to watch, seldom grows or changes."

Maddy, on the other hand, he says is "well-rounded but less well-written - there's a wider range to her personality but she doesn't have the lines Addison Ensemble shows, Adams said, are easier to write for, have a stronger appeal and are cheaper to produce. They grew from soap operas, he added, and said as long as writers keep the show new to the audience, an ensemble show will last for some time.

Some shows are facing serious problems now, Adams said, especially those ensembles that have "worn out their welcome," like "Simon and Simon," "Dallas" and "Magnum, P.I."

"The plots get old," Adams said, and the writers "force everything into a formula. If it's working, don't mess with it."

The future of television lies in strong writing and standard television fare like light family comedy and dramas, Adams said. Certain new forms are emerging, like "Miami Vice" and "The Golden Girls," but the majority of television shows will be rehashes of older shows that have been successes in the past. It will be up to writers, actors, actresses and directors to keep the shows alive.

Students may benefit from McCain series

By ANGELA O'HARA Collegian Reporter

With the announcement of the 1986-87 season of entertainment in McCain Auditorium comes a bonus for students.

A McCain student season pass will allow students to attend a variety of events at a lower cost, said Richard Diehl, director of Mc-Cain Auditorium.

"We're working to offer a taste of variety. Our goal is to increase student knowledge of McCain. It's a vital aspect of the total educational program," Diehl said.

With a schedule including the magic of David Copperfield, the Houston Ballet performing "The Sleeping Beauty," Mel Torme, and Cole Porter's Broadway musical "Can-Can," Diehl said students are assured a well-rounded cultural encounter.

Diehl said the student package will probably resemble "The Lucky 7-11" program currently available to McCain supporters. This package entitles the purchaser to attend between seven and 11 performances throughout the year at a discount rate.

Each show has its own appeal. Students could enjoy the diversity of performances if they would look to McCain as a resource, he said. Most students aren't aware they don't have to wear a tie every time they attend a performance.

"I want students to feel comfortable," Diehl said.

The 1986-87 season is the second Diehl has planned since coming to McCain three years ago. Since that time he has been re-working Mc-Cain's marketing approach to appeal to an audience as varied as McCain's programming. He hires one student intern each year to help with publicity and news

Season ticket sales increased 50 percent last year, Diehl said. Next year he plans to approach on- and off-campus student groups as well as groups in Wichita and Salina to raise sales another 10 percent. "McCain has the potential to become the regional arts center," Diehl said. Location and program variety are the two main reasons to which he attributes the possibili-

Other musical groups will include "Kansas Memories," performing stories and songs on stage two at 11:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m., Glen Eyrie of Kansas City, Kan., performing Celtic music on stage two at 2:30 and 5:30 p.m. and Don Lipovac and the Tamburitzans also of Kansas City, Kan., performing Croatian music and dance at 12:30 p.m. on stage one. An afternoon of bluegrass music has been scheduled, starting at 12:30 p.m. Sunday.

A group called the Last Kansas Exit, will highlight the afternoon of entertainment. The group members are from the Lawrence and Kansas City, Kan., area and have been together since 1983.

The Last Kansas Exit will play from 3:30 until 5:30 p.m. Sunday on stage one in West Stadium.

In January 1985, the Last Kansas Exit traveled to Nashville, Tenn., to compete in the International Blugrass Band Contest, and came away with first place.

The Wheatland Express from Junction City will perform bluegrass at 1:30 p.m. Sunday also on stage one.

Staff-to-youth ratio low, report shows

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The Youth Center at Topeka, where 15 employees were attacked during a nine-month period ending in March, has a lower staff-toresident ratio than three other state juvenile detention facilities, a recent governmental audit shows.

In addition, the report by the Legislative Division of Post Audit showed that the most serious attacks on the youth center's staff appeared to be in connection with escape attempts.

The report, which was released late last week, said a total of six attacks at the youth center had resulted in hospital treatment and four of those incidents were in connection with escape attempts.

"These four attacks all occurred during the late night shift when only one staff member was on duty in (each housing) cottage," the report

The Youth Center at Topeka is the state's largest youth rehabilitation and detention facility, generally housing boys from 13 to 18 years old.

The center, which is operated by the Department of Social and Rehabilitation Services, had 202 employees, spent $7 million and housed about 200 youths during the budget year that ended last July, the report said.

The center, in northwest Topeka, does not have a security staff and instead uses youth service workers to monitor and supervise students. The center had a ratio of one staff member to 1.9 residents - higher than staff-student ratios at similar youth centers in Atchison, Beloit and Larned, the report said.

In comparison, the Youth Center at Atchison had a staff-student ratio of one to 1.6, the Youth Center at Beloit, one to 1.7, and the Youth Center at Larned, one to 1.5.

Gasoline prices starting to stabilize

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - After dropping 40 cents a gallon since November, gasoline prices began stabilizing in April, the state's fuel allocation analyst said Thursday.

Prices at self-service pumps increased about 2 cents a gallon and remained constant at full-service pumps in April, said Lyle Goltz, fuel analyst for the Kansas Corporation Commission.

Goltz' monthly survey of gasoline sales outlets statewide showed an average price of 81 cents a gallon for regular leaded gas, 83 cents for regular leaded and 99 cents for premium unleaded at self-service pumps. At full-service pumps, the prices were 96 cents a gallon for regular, 99 cents for regular unleaded and $1.16 for premium unleaded. Diesel fuel is selling for 90 cents a gallon at self-service pumps and 98 cents at full-service pumps, Goltz

"There are no obvious reasons to believe that prices of gasoline or diesel fuel will change much in the next few months," Goltz said. "There is a 27-day supply of gasoline on hand for the nation, which is a rather low inventory, but would be adequate unless lower prices stimulate demand."

McCain's performance series operates on an annual budget of about $200,000. Diehl said he will continue to keep programming costs under that amount.

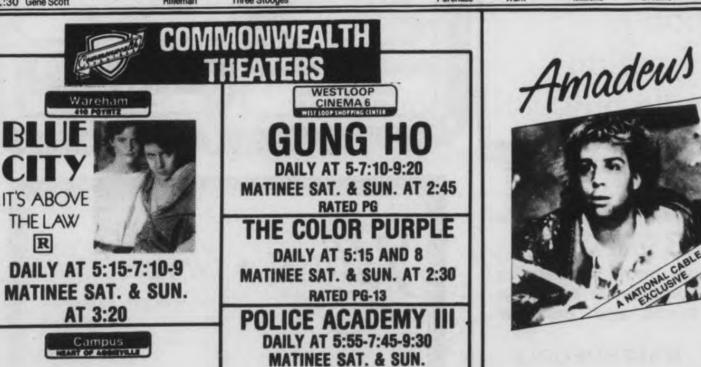

Federal cutbacks are limiting the amount of monetary support available, he said, and grants are not any easier to receive. Consequently, there is a greater reliance on private support to maintain quality programming, Diehl said.

"We have to extend ourselves, he said, "beat the bushes."

Before coming to K-State Diehl worked in Cincinnatti, West Virginia, Indiana and Kentucky. He said midwesterners are more receptive to the arts than people in the East. Midwesterners realize to see a major entertainer they would have to tavel to a metropolitan area, he said. So he said he keeps that in mind when programming for McCain.

"I look at quality first," Diehl said, "then distinctiveness.

"Variety comes out of that," he said. "And after all, variety is the spice of life."

Music Review

Anyone who has seen a Verandas live performance knows they're a fun, energetic dance band. Their mixture of cover material and original tunes keeps the dance floor hot. However, hearing "V-Notes" without having experienced the band's live energy would generate a different impression of the Verandas than their talent deserves.

"V-Notes" is rather sedate, as if the producers gave the 12-inch E.P. a valium.

Music to highlight folk festival

By DIXIE GLANVILLE Collegian Reporter

Musical entertainment will run rampant on campus this weekend during the Kansas Folklife Festival.

Some of the groups that will be playing were nominated by their communities and some were selected by the Folk Life Festival Committee.

The committee looked for groups that performed traditional music, said Melinda Sinn, public information coordinator for the Division of Continuing Education. Groups will be performing on two different stages, stage two in Ahearn and stage one in West Stadium.

The musical entertainment lineup for Saturday's events will be varied with acoustical blues, Croation music, gospel and bluegrass. Performers will include Doug and Linda Teener of Manhattan playing dulcimers on stage two at 10:30 a.m. and 1:30 p.m.; the New Light Inspirational Choir from Kansas City, Kan., singing gospel music on stage one at 1:30 and 3:30 p.m.; and Lemuel Sheppard of Pittsburg performing acoustical blues on stage one at 10:30 a.m. and stage two at 2:30 p.m. Other musical groups will include "Kansas Memories," performing stories and songs on stage two at 11:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m., Glen Eyrie of Kansas City, Kan., performing Celtic music on stage two at 2:30 and 5:30 p.m. and Don Lipovac and the Tamburitzans also of Kansas City, Kan., performing Croatian music and dance at

Anyone who has seen a Verandas live performance knows they're a fun, energetic dance band. Their mixture of cover material and original tunes keeps the dance floor hot. However, hearing "V-Notes" without having experienced the band's live energy would generate a different impression of the Verandas than their talent deserves.

"American Tradition" on side two. slaps American culture right between the eyes. The combination of political satire and special effects merge purposefully into the album's most prolific effort. Digital manipulation of a sample of President Reagan's rhetoric, merits kudos all its own.

Why the originality of inspiring works like "Get Out of My Car You Drive Like Shit," recognized by Verandas fans across the Midwest, didn't deserve a slot on the album, only the band knows.

The music resembles a little of a lot of what's already being heard in the industry. "Who Ya Gonna Blame Now" is too much like Howard Jones to be considered aggressive. Typical techno-pop sounds emit from the heavily synthesized bass, guitar and keyboards. Keyboards could have been more effectively used for counter-melody lines. Again, the exception is "American Tradition" where a '60s-sounding organ is used.

Vocals, even using two digital delays, lack the life typified by the band's live show. Listening prompts yearning for a breath of meaty emphasis to invade the studio. The sound is light, almost withdrawn, and too laid-back.

"V-Notes" slinks to the realm of almost "Muzak"-like background noise. Take the Verandas out of the studio, and you've got a different band. For those who care to give them a try, they'll be performing tonight at Brother's Tavern, 1120 Moro St. Then decide if the memory of an outstanding performance can add color to the gray of "V-Notes."

Gary Naughton, K-State extension forester, uses a transit to measure the Louis Vieux elm Thursday. The elm near Wamego was believed to be the largest in the nation until the measurement proved it just short of the title.

Kansas elm still falls short

By TRINA KLOTZBACH Collegian Reporter

Despite the efforts of a Kansas forester to prove otherwise, Virginia can still claim bragging rights to the nation's largest elm tree.

The former largest elm, the Louis Vieux tree near Wamego, was measured Thursday by its caretaker, Gary Naughton, K-State extension forester, but it was not big enough to reclaim the crown.

The 271-year-old landmark was last measured in 1979 when it became the U.S. champion. At that time it was 99 feet tall, 277 inches around and had a crown spread of 124 feet. It lost the title in 1985 to a Virginia tree which is 125 feet tall, has a trunk circumference of 284 inches and a crown spread of 122 feet.

When the Kansas elm was measured again, Naughton found it had grown in width to 299.16 inches, but had shrunk to a height of 97.4

To determine a winner, the American Forestry Association adds the number of inches in the trunk's circumference at the height of 41/2 feet; the number of feet in the tree's height; and one-fourth the number of feet in the average diameter of the tree's crown.

With Thursday's measurements, the Kansas elm has 428 points, 12 points behind the Virginia tree.

"I've never lost a closer race in my life," Naughton said. "But unless they measured that one (the Virginia tree) wrong, we'll have to give them the title."

Naughton said the sign standing near the tree proclaiming it the U.S. champion must be removed, but a new one will be erected proclaiming it the biggest elm on the Oregon

Naughton said he will probably remeasure the tree in a few years.

The ability of U.S spy satellites to look into other nations has been demonstrated impressively in the past week, according to officials familiar with the pictures.

At least two types of American spy satellites orbit over the Ukraine, beaming their information back to Earth on passes over the United States, said sources speaking on condition of anonymity.

University's film to present tragedy of drinking, driving

ABOVE: Michael Atherton is serving a three- to 10-year jail sentence at Lansing State Penitentiary for the 1984 second-degree murder of Lola Tucker Bolek. While driving under the influence, Atherton struck a car in which

By BECKY MARTIN Collegian Reporter

June 5, 1984, began as a "beautiful day," but ended in tragedy for Lola Bolek Tucker, who was killed by a drunken driver.

Michael Atherton, inmate at Lansing State Penitentiary, was convicted of second-degree murder for the death of 23-year-old Bolek, and sentenced to three to 10 years' imprisonment, which he is now serving. The Alcohol and Other Drug Education Services is making a film relating to the drunken driving issue and will feature the story of Donna Bolek, mother of Lola, and Atherton, said Bill Arck, director of the ADS Office in Holton Hall.

Arck said the film will try to create an overall view of the problem of drunken driving and the consequences for oneself and others.

The film will be completed during the summer and shown campus-wide in early fall, he said.

Arck originated the idea for the film and contacted Bolek to solicit her cooperation. Both Bolek and Atherton will be featured in the film, he said. Arck said the film's purpose is to show not only the emotional effects of such an accident on the victim's family, but also the penalties a drunken driver may suffer.

In September 1984, after the death of her daughter, Bolek started a Mothers Against Drunk Drivers chapter in Riley County. Since then Bolek has been traveling throughout Kansas giving lectures about driving while under the influence of alcohol.

"Sometimes when you tell people you're involved with a group like MADD they kind of turn up their noses. They think you are strictly against drinking, and the thing we really care about is that they just do it someplace other than in their car on the highway," she said.

Bolek first initiated the Riley County chapter of MADD when one of her other daughters set up a memorial with MADD in Lola's name.

Bolek said when she and her daughter tried to contact a local chapter of MADD, they found there was not one. Consequently, they decided to start a chapter

Bolek remembers her daughter as "being a clown." "She loved spur of the moment ideas," she said. "She was so energetic. Every year on the first big snow, Lola was always the first one with her sled out, and the rest of the neighborhood would be close behind

Lola Bolek was the mother of two children, one boy who will soon be 4 years old, and one daughter, 2.

Right before her death, Lola was divorced. Her husband, living in Nebraska, returned for custody of the children, Bolek said. Since then, Lola's ex-husband has refused to let Lola's family see the children.

"Not only did we lose our daughter, we lost our grandchildren all because of one drunk driver," she said.

Atherton, originally from Boulder, Colo., had been cited for other drunken driving offenses before the accident involving Lola.

Atherton said his drinking problem started at a young age. His father gave him beer when he was still an infant to get him to go to sleep.

"I started going to keg parties by the time I was 13 years old. At the time I didn't think I had a drinking problem, but now I realize I did." Atherton said he remembers the day of the accident as starting out to be a "beautiful day." He had just worked 15 hours the day before and he was ready to relax.

He said he bought a 12-pack of beer and started doing some work on his car. After that he went to Tuttle Creek with a friend and on the way stopped and bought another 12-pack.

The day continued like this until he could not remember anything else until after the accident when he was hospitalized, he said.

"I don't remember getting into my car the last time. The next thing I knew I was in the hospital and I couldn't believe it when the nurse told me that a young lady had been

"How can I tell you what it's like to kill someone - I can't. I wanted to trade places with her and die myself. If it wasn't for the nurse in the room with me, I think I would have tried to kill myself."

Atherton, 26, said it is hard to describe non-freedom to people who have the freedom to do what they choose.

"I have a little boy who is growing up without me to see him. Instead of his first words being 'daddy', they are going to be 'where is daddy?'"

Atherton said the accident has affected his relationship with his wife, who is alone and has to support their son by herself.

"She's angry; I can't blame her and how far is 'sorry' going to go?" During the trial, Lola's father punched Atherton. He was first charged with assault but the charge was later

"I give him that punch," Atherton said. "I don't blame him. I'd let him do it again.

'How do you tell someone that you're sorry for killing their ughter? You can't.' Atherton said he can't wait to get out of prison and try to help others. Right now I don't like myself, I want to show people I mean what I say. I can't make it up to the family, but I can try to make it up to Atherton said when he gets out of prison he wants to educate himself about alcohol and drug problems before he starts speaking to others about them.

"If I see someone try to drive while they are drunk I'm going to try to stop them or else give them a ride

Bolek said she now corresponds with Atherton and sent him a St. Jude's medallion.

He said he was worthless. St Jude means hope for the hopeless," she said.

Atherton is now in a minimum security dormitory facility at Lansing, said Jim Barkley, correctional counselor I at the facility.

"He had to really work hard to get here," he said.

Barkley said Atherton was on a work program where he makes 75 cents a day. The inmates are free to use the money for cigarettes, pop or other things they wish to buy.

"I'm trying to do the best I can inside these walls and when I get out I've got to do even better." Atherton "Drinking and driving is a dead serious issue and I do mean dead serious. God gave us minds and we've got to use them in the way he intended us to."

Members of the campus Alcohol and other Drug Education Services program film and interview Atherton at Lansing State Penitentiary. The film will be used to show the consequences of driving while under the influence.

Students to present fashions

By ALICE KUNSHEK Collegian Reporter

Design Portfolio '86 is to seniors majoring in apparel design what finals are to most students.

The showcase of fashion will take place at 3:30 p.m. Sunday in Nichols Theatre where these students will show their final presentations.

"I think it gives them motivation, a goal to work toward through the year," said Carol Ann Honeycutt, apparel design program coordinator.

Students from five classes submitted garments for consideration for the show; however, not all garments were selected to be in the portfolio showcase, Honeycutt said.

The classes which submitted work for the show are Clothing Construction, Advanced Clothing Construction, Intermediate Apparel Design, Advanced Apparel Design and Pattern Theory I.

Those garments to be in the portfolio showcase were selected by apparel-design faculty.

The garments have been made as class projects lasting from four to 10 weeks. Students began designing the garments soon after the close of last year's show, Honeycutt said.

This is the fourth design portfolio and it will feature 40 design contributors/participants and 25 student

The garments aren't modeled by the person who designed them, Honeycutt said. Tryouts were conducted and the apparel-design faculty selected the models.

Judges for the show are professionals from the design field.

The awards the judges will be presenting are best of show, best junior/senior design, most marketable, most creative, best tailored garment and best workmanship (construction).

Seven to 10 students applied to make the design which will be placed on the program cover, posters, invitations and tickets. The winner was Britta Stolfus, junior in apparel design.

Tickets to attend the event cost $6.50 for adults and college students and $5 for high-school students. Proceeds from the show will go to cover expenses and any remaining money will be put into the KSU Foundation toward next year's show.

KCC defends lower gas rate hike

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - The staff of the Kansas Corporation Commission on Thursday took the witness stand to defend its recommendation that KPL Gas Service Co.'s request for $21.2 million in higher natural gas rates be cut.

Joe Williams, KCC rate analyst, discussed KPL's proposal to consolidate rates paid by customers of the two companies prior to a 1983 merger. And he supported KPL's proposal to shift to a "cost based" rate for residential and small commercial customers, with modifica-

KPL has said it does not believe it's fair to make large commercial and industrial customers subsize residential rates. For that reason, it wants to increase residential rates while cutting large industrial rates. Such a move also will make KPL's gas more competitive for industrial customers.

However, KPL wants to gradually move the residential rates up, rather than implementing a full cost-based rate.

"The company simply felt total consolidation in one step would cause too great an impact on these customers," Williams said. "They have, however, suggested a somewhat higher increase for (residential) in order to continue moving in the direction of further consolidation.

Williams said he basically approved of KPL's plan because "there is no logical reason for similar types of customers served by the same company from the same types of distribution systems to continue to pay different margins."

And with gas prices at their lowest levels in years, Williams said KPL chose the right time to consolidate rates. However, Williams said KPL was trying to make too big a shift.

"I do not believe that it is necessary to take so great a step at one time," Williams said. "I think it is safe to assume that there will be future opportunities to take further remedial steps."

Lack of liability insurance may stop fireworks shows

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Dazzling fireworks displays that light up the skies on the Fourth of July may be shot down this year because of the liability insurance

The three-day Kansas City Spirit Festival, which wraps up each night with a big fireworks and laser light show, may have to do without fireworks unless organizers can get around the city's requirement for $1 million in liability insurance.

"It just wouldn't be a festival without fireworks," Jim Jacob, executive director of the July 3-5 celebration in downtown Kansas City, said Thursday.

"In the past, it was no problem getting $2 million in insurance. This year they can only go to $500,000," he said.

"The city requires any fireworks user to have $1 million in liability insurance. Professional fireworks people belong to an association that underwrites only a half million dollars. We've gone out and tried to find additional insurance, but nobody else is writing fireworks insurance except the association," Jacob said.

"We're trying to work with the City Council and Risk Management Committee to lower the requirement. Right now there isn't any insurance to be had out there," the festival director said.

Panel defeats pornography regulations Cable TV group commends decision

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Attorney General's Commission on Pornography narrowly defeated a recommendation to seek regulation of movies with sexually explicit themes shown on cable television.

The commission also voted 6-5 against urging prosecution on the basis of obscenity of books that are sexually explicit, as long as they do not contain graphic pictures or focus on sexual abuse of children.

A cable TV group and the American Civil Liberties Union on Thursday praised the decisions by the 11-member panel, which is meeting this week to draft a final report that is expected to urge a law enforcement crackdown on many types of pornographic material.

"Even I would have to concede publicly that two minor miracles have occurred" on the issues of cable television and the printed word, said Barry Lynn of the American Civil Liberties Union, a consistent critic of the commission.

Five of the country's most prominent authors, including John Irving and John Updike, wrote to the commission saying that attempts to curb sexually explicit passages in literature would infringe on freedom of writers to portray the truth. 'We're not elated, we're just relieved," said Steve Tuttle, spokesman for National Cable Television Association, a trade association representing more than 2,000 cable operators. "We are gratified that the commission has taken what appears to be a thorough and factual look at cable television and has found nothing there that should be censored."

As an alternative to regulation, the cable industry favors the widespread availability of lock-out devices, which can be installed to block children's access to adult cable programming and R-rated movies.

Six commission members voted late Wednesday against the recommendation that the federal government, through the Federal Communications Commission, regulate the cable TV showing of movies characterized by the commission staff as "indecent," although not legally obscene.

Rejection of the cable TV recommendation came after the commission agreed earlier this week to use as its outline for a final report a document prepared by commission member Frederick Schauer, a University of Michigan law pro-

Schauer's report, while sharing many of the assumptions of a more toughly worded alternative draft prepared by the commission staff, differed from it in several respects. Schauer's views, for example, prevailed over those of the staff on the issue of cable TV.

But Schauer's report, like the staff document that has been condemned by civil libertarians, finds that evidence of societal harm from pornographic material depicting sexual violence or degradation of women is sufficient to justify strongly stepped up law enforcement efforts.

Tass on a meeting in New York between U.N. Secretary-General Javier Perez de Cuellar and Yuri Dubinin, chief Soviet delegate to the United Nations.

It said: "The Soviet government has informed a group of European states of the accident and steps undertaken to liquidate its consequences, so that the governments of nations that could be affected could take the necessary measures for securing the health of the population and to protect the environment."

Vladimir Lomeiko, a Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman, said in an ABC television interview that reports of high casualties were "an absurdity." He accused Western reporters of starting an anti-Soviet campaign.

"Who needs to create on the basis of this tragedy and sorrow this situation and this atmosphere of psychosis and distrust?" he said.

More foreigners left the Ukraine to avoid potential health hazards. Their governments monitored the radioactivity and denounced the Soviets for not providing full information.

London's Daily Mail said in an editorial: "The fact that it (the Soviet Union) cares nothing for those beyond its borders will be remembered long after the name of the Chernobyl power station has been forgotten.'

The British Foreign Office warned travelers to avoid Moscow and Warsaw, the Polish capital, saying Soviet authorities were withholding information about radiation levels.

Because of the wind shift, no new radiation was reported in Sweden, but levels three times normal were recorded in northern Austria after overnight showers.

The levels are not considered dangerous to health, but people were advised to keep children indoors and not to drink milk from cows that had eaten freshly cut grass in the previous 24 hours.

About 80 British and half a dozen American students who had been visiting Kiev for two weeks arrived in Moscow by train early Thursday and Soviet doctors who gave them medical tests reported no serious contamination.

Neither the official Soviet statement issued Wednesday afternoon nor any of the three previous ones has given details about specific damage resulting from the accident, the nature of injuries or potential health hazards.

The Soviets have not specifically denied that a fire or explosion occurred at the power station, as reported in the West, but a television commentator on displayed a black-and-white photograph Wednesday night that he said proved "there is no gigantic destruction or fire.'

said a reactor was ripped apart in the accident, but gave no cause. The U.S. intelligence sources, speaking on condition of anonymity, said they believe problems began Friday leading to a meltdown, with four or five representatives of the farm groups present, but altered his plans when the group, waiting outside his office, insisted on having everyone present for the meeting.

After finding a suitable room to conduct a roundtable discussion, the group moved from Waters Hall to 130 Cardwell Hall.

The discussion began with the group leaders giving short statements, followed by responses from Flinchbaugh and Mark Johnson, head of the Department of Agricultural Economics.

Politicians revitalize populist ideas

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Congressmen Lane Evans and Newt Gingrich are ideological opposites whose votes on most issues cancel each other out, yet both like to call themselves

Why the rush back to populism, a movement that began in rural America in the late 19th Century?

There is no single answer to why some of the most liberal as well as the most conservative politicians want to reclaim the movement.

Reagan wins allies' support

By The Associated Press

TOKYO - President Reagan won agreement from several U.S. allies Sunday that "a united front" is needed to combat terrorism, hours after primitive missiles fired by would-be summit saboteurs missed their mark, seemingly driving home Reagan's point.

A morning rainfall laced with radiation from the nuclear accident in the Soviet Union underscored a second top Reagan priority in his talks with U.S. summit partners - the need for greater vigilance on the part of the world's nations on nuclear reactor safety.

During a three-hour working dinner Sunday night, White House spokesman Larry Speakes told reporters, Reagan and the other summit participants discussed only two topics - terrorism and the nuclear accident at Chernobyl.

On the question of terrorism, he said, the leaders "stand unanimous on the need for strong, concerted action....The leaders believe that cooperation and a united front are essential in the war against international terrorism."

Speakes revealed that the leaders of Canada, Great Britain, France, Japan, Italy and West Germany agreed to draft statements on both terrorism and nuclear safety for presentation to the summit on Mon-

"On the Chernobyl nuclear accident, the leaders agreed on the need to strengthen the safety procedures and to improve accident reporting procedures," Speakes said, briefing reporters late Sunday (Tokyo time).

'They agreed on the need for timely notification of accidents that occur involving nuclear materials," he said. "This would include immediate notification to affected nations in case of a nuclear accident that could affect the safety and health of

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. - Investigators Sunday analyzed an unmanned Delta rocket that was blown up when it careened out of control Saturday, the third disastrous NASA launch this year.

"Everybody is hard at work today, trying to resolve the problems in some form or another," said Hugh Harris, spokesman for the National Aeronautics and Space Administra-

Acting NASA Administrator William Graham flew to the Cape on Sunday but did not talk to reporters. Saturday's loss included the three-stage $30 million Delta rocket, NASA's most used and most dependable launcher, and a $57.5 million space vehicles.

The rocket's destruction came after the Jan. 28 explosion of the space shuttle Challenger with seven astronauts aboard and the April 18 loss of an Air Force Titan 34D rocket. The Air Force successfully launched an Atlas-Centaur rocket with a classified payload in February. Director Richard G. Smith of the Kennedy Space Center conferred

Sunday with managers of the Delta project and the expendable rockets program preparatory to announcing a failure review board to conduct a formal investigation.

In immediate jeopardy were at least two Cape Canaveral launches of one-time-use rockets: a May 22 Atlas-Centaur supposed to boost a Navy communications satellite into orbit and an Aug. 14 Delta flight to carry a military spacecraft.

The GOES orbiters - Geostationary Operational Environmental Satellite - are considered vital to the nation's weather-monitoring capabilities since only one is currently in orbit and its five-year life cycle is almost up, said Gerald Longanecker, manager of NASA's meteorological satellite program.

Juan Antonio, a Guatemalan farmer in his mid-30s, decided to leave his country on a Sunday in 1980 — the day after Guatemalan army troops raided his village and burned his home.

Special Report

"I knew something was going to happen," he said, "so I sent my family to another village where my wife's mother lived. What I wanted to do was to face the army and tell em I hadn't done anything wrong. But I got scared, so I ran."

After crossing the Mexican border, Juan planned to return to Guatemala to tell his family he had survived the raid. Before he could reach the village, however, he heard troops and fled again. When he crossed the border the second time, he kept running.

Eventually, he crossed the border into the United States and contacted his wife, Alicia, and the five children he left behind.

"My family thought I had been killed," he said. "Alicia wrote back and said things were getting worse there and that the army was around all the time. She was afraid someday they would come in and kill them. Alicia asked me, 'Since you saved your life, why don't you come back and save ours?""

Juan returned to Guatemala to escort his family on a three-day walk to the Mexican border.

"When we were moving, we didn't realize there was killing going on where most refugees go," Juan said. "The army came in and bombed all the villages close to the Mexican border and people left by the thousands."

Beth Graybill, administrative director of Peace for Guatemala, a Washington-based fund-raising organization which assists refugees, said there has been a 'curtain of silence drawn across Guatemala" because of U.S. assistance and human-rights

Juan Antonio said the killing started when students began to organize and ask the government for a salary increase. They also organized the campesinos - or farmers - who asked for national land in order to grow their own food, he said. # Grain science helping Pakistan thrive

By SAM HOSTETTLER Collegian Reporter

Many organizations in the world are helping countries in need of assistance. At K-State, the Department of Grain Science and Industry is involved in helping Pakistan improve its grain system.

"The Agency for International Development in Pakistan awarded us the contract," said Charles Deyoe, professor and head of grain science and industry. "It is a 41/2 year program involving $2.6

The department will be trying to achieve several objectives in the program. The first objective is to improve the management of public grain storage systems in Pakistan including inventory control of crops. Another objective is maintenance of storage facilities and improving physical facilities.

The development of human resources is yet another objective. This includes training people in Pakistan to do a better job in the grain industry. Improving quality control for the stored grain is another objective of the program.

The department will also be involved in pest control. This will reduce the losses of grain due to the infestation of insects.

Deyoe said the program will look at different ways of storing the grain. "We may be going from basic bag storing and converting it to bulk handling," he said. "Then again, we may want to retain the old bag system," in which the grain is stored in bags rather than bins. A main part of the program is to evaluate the existing grain program in Pakistan and make recommendations to help the industry, Deyoe

"We are going to work closely with the Pakistan Agricultural Research Council," he said. "We will also be working closely with AID."

Deyoe said the department had some long-term technical advantages in the marketing strategy over other bidders in receiving the contract.

Kansas Folklife Festival keeps traditions alive

Passing down Kansas traditions in food, music and crafts describes the eighth annual Kansas Folklife Festival Saturday and Sunday in Ahearn Field House, said Carol Smith, festival coordinator.

The festival is sponsored by the Division of Continuing Education at K-State, with support from the Kansas State Historical Society. It has been at K-State for five years.

Jennie Chinn, state folklorist, said the event was successful this year because of some changes which were

"We heard some very positive responses to the expansion that we did this year. We moved outdoors, which helped to spread things out and allowed us to get outside of Ahearn Field House," Chinn said.

The festival consisted of such events as arts apprenticeship programs, food booths, a crafts learning center, historical displays, festival stores and a petting zoo, as well as several other events.

The performers and artists in the festival were from all over Kansas, Chinn said. There were about 3,000 tickets sold during the festival's two-

The addition of the outdoor area allowed more room for the petting zoo and the adult games area. Some of the food booths were also located outside. The area in Memorial Stadium also allowed for tents to be set up to accommodate some events.

Troops, firemen chase rioters

MANILA, Philippines - Riot troops and firemen chased about 3,000 supporters of deposed President Ferdinand E. Marcos across Manila's busiest park on Sunday and then blasted them with a water cannon to get them off a main street.

Meanwhile, Vice President Salvador H. Laurel said he told President Reagan the Philippines believes Marcos might try to destabilize the new Manila government if he were to leave his exile in Hawaii for another country. Laurel said Reagan "understood our position."

At least two people were injured and five others arrested when riot police dispersed Marcos supporters trying to stage a rally at Manila's downtown Rizal Park and on Roxas Boulevard to demand the return of their ousted leader.

Manila's new police chief, Brig. Gen. Alfredo Lim, ordered the attack on the Marcos loyalists after they gathered for a prayer rally at the park where they had held demonstrations for three previous Sun-

The official media claimed the United States was trying to poison world opinion against the Soviet Union and draw attention away from its own nuclear test program.

Boris Yeltsin, the Moscow Communist Party chief and a non-voting member of the ruling Politburo, told The Associated Press in an interview in Hamburg, West Germany, that 49,000 residents of four settlements near the Chernobyl nuclear power plant in the Ukraine had been evacuated.

He said it was "difficult to say" when they could return home, and said farming had been halted and livestock slaughtered within a 12-mile radius of the plant because of radioactive fallout.

Yeltsin said the accident at the reactor 80 miles north of Kiev occurred April 26. Another Soviet official, Georgi A. Arbatov, speaking from Moscow over the British Broadcasting Corp. radio, said it occurred late April 26 or the next day.

Arctic explorers return home

ST. PAUL, Minn. - Six arctic adventurers, out of touch with civilization for 56 days on their 500-mile dogsled trek to the North Pole, returned home Sunday to friends, families and a heroes' welcome.

"What a fantastic, miserable and wonderful trip," team member Geoff Carroll told a crowd of 600 who waved American flags and cheered as the charter jet landed at St. Paul's downtown airport.

"We all love you," Gov. Rudy Perpich told the team. "And on behalf of all the people of Minnesota, congratulations on a wonderful

Peary claimed to have trekked to the pole and back in 1909, from the same starting point as the Steger expediton, in 52 days. The use of satellite tracking and a flyover by a Canadian military reconnissance plane was part of Steger's effort to verify whether Peary's

Texan voters reject extremists

DALLAS - Texas voters set up a November bout between Gov. Mark White and the man he knocked out of office four years ago, former Gov. Bill Clements, and overwhelmingly rejected candidates linked to extremist Lyndon LaRouche.

As predicted in polls, Clements garnered nearly 60 percent of the Republican vote Saturday against former congressman Kent Hance and U.S. Rep. Tom Loeffler to get a chance in November to avenge his upset loss to White.

White had a tougher time Saturday, but received nearly 54 percent of the vote to avoid a runoff in his bid for a second four-year term.

The success of LaRouche supporters in Illinois earlier this year failed to spread to Texas. The lone LaRouche candidate for statewide office lost resoundingly, and 10 candidates for congressional nominations finished last.

Two LaRouche backers had no Democratic opposition for nominations to congressional seats, but the Houston-area districts are considered Republican strongholds.

Nader said the multiple choice tests are being used more because they are recorded by machines, save on labor and don't require a judgment on the part of scorers.

Nader also said that the learning process in American schools was characterized by "memorization, regurgitation and vegetation." "At ten years of age, the imagination is spectacular," he said. "The questions are stunning...Look what we do to these minds every year. We close them out."

CINCINNATI - The Soviet Union should provide more information about its nuclear reactor accident if the Soviets expect the United States to embrace an arms control agreement, Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole said Sunday.

Dole, a Kansas Republican considered a likely presidential contender in 1988, also said he expects a meeting this year between President Reagan and Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev.

Reagan has criticized the Soviet government for not providing the world with more information about this month's accident at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant, near Kiev. Dole said he shares Reagan's concern, saying the Soviets' response suggests how they might withhold information pertaining to an arms control treaty.

"If the Soviets can't even give us information about a civilian disaster or accident - whatever they're calling it - why should we follow a SALT II agreement?" Dole said. "I think the president's probably expressing the view of a great majority of Americans.

Reagan said Sunday in Tokyo that he is still interested in meeting with Gorbachev this year in Washington. U.S. officials were encouraged when Gorbachev relayed a message to the president Sunday through British Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher.

"I think there will be a meeting," Dole told a news conference. "I don't think Mr. Gorbachev would tell the president something - he suggested a meeting in the United States - and then renege on it."

Dole said a Gorbachev-Reagan summit could produce agreements on such issues as travel and trade between the countries, and on the Soviet government's willingness to release dissidents.

"The fact that they're sitting down together is, I think, good news for the free world," Dole said.

Robert Alda dies after illness

LOS ANGELES - Actor Robert Alda, who starred as George Gershwin in the story of the composer's life, "Rhapsody in Blue," and was the father of actor Alan Alda, has died after a long illness. He was 72.

Alda, who suffered a stroke two years ago and never fully recovered, died Saturday night at his Los Angeles home, Robert Zarem, Alan Alda's New York publicist, said Sunday.

Alda's son, star of the "M-A-S-H" television series and many films, was on his way back to Los Angeles from New York to be with the family and could not be reached for comment, Zarem said.

Robert Alda, born Alfonso d'Abruzzo in 1914, combined the first two letters of his first and last names for a stage pseudonym and worked many years in New York theater. He created the role of Sky Masterson in the musical "Guys and Dolls" on Broadway He said father and son had remained close, and Alan Alda had visited his father frequently in the last few months.

"He taught me how to tell jokes," the younger Alda said of his father during a 1973 interview. "We would do Abbott and Costello routines....We'd do 'Who's on First?"

Wedding includes comedian

LAS VEGAS, Nev. - Comedian Joan Rivers made an Arizona couple an offer they couldn't refuse, and ended up as maid of honor at their impromptu wedding on the Las Vegas Strip.

Victoria Vincent, 29, and Michael Nick, 27, of Phoenix, were married at the Little Chapel of the West Saturday night as the normally unflappable comedian dabbed at her eyes.

The couple was at Rivers' show at Caesars Palace Friday, and she began talking with them as part of her routine. She asked if they were married and learned the couple had been together for 10 years. "I figured it was time they got married, and I told them I would be the maid of honor if they did," Rivers said.

'Mike and I talked about it most of the night," said the new bride. "Finally we decided to do it, not knowing whether Joan was serious

"I told them, 'Just give me an hour's notice, tell me where, and I'll be there," Rivers recalled.

Plans for K-State's International Center should be approved next week by the state architect, said Paul Young, vice president for University development. Completion of the center is set for spring semester 1977 if contracting agreements are finalized this August as scheduled.

Representatives of both Westloop and downtown businesses breathed sighs of relief as the Manhattan City Commission voted to send the plan for rezoning of the Westloop Shopping Center back to the City Planning Board. Westloop representatives had sought a change in an ordinance limiting space in the center at 25,000 square feet.

Librarians seek to end book mutilations

By TERESA TEMME Collegian Reporter

The research of two University librarians may help other libraries discover and prevent mutilation of library materials.

Ann Birney, humanities reference librarian at Farrell Library, and Sara Williams, head of the serials department at Farrell, have undertaken a five-year research project to discover the reasons for mutilation and solutions to the problem.

Williams said she and Birney at first tried to discover how prevalent the problem was and whether the situation warranted further investigation.

"It is a depressing problem," Williams said. "There is more of a problem than we thought. People are robbing other students and faculty. We could use the money normally used for replacement to buy other new which makes it difficult for patrons to obtain the materials they need. Many approaches have been undertaken by other libraries to counter the problem, she said, but none of these approaches are effective

Birney and Williams' research, which began in the fall of 1984, will be published this summer in Library and Archival Security magazine, Birney said.

"At least other libraries won't have to spend time and energy on this same project," Birney said.

The scientific approach to this problem has never been undertaken at K-State before, and this new approach could bring new solutions, she said.

The research at Farrell involves patron participation. Posters hanging on every floor of the library notify patrons of the existence of mutilation and the patrons are encouraged to report any mutilation they find in materials by filling out damage reports and placing them in

These reports are used to let Birney and Williams know if the patrons will report damage and to define how much mutilation exists, Birney said.

Williams said the damage reports allow the patrons to do something about mutilation, whereas before all a patron could do was "curse a little and throw the material back down."

Baker University, Wichita State University and Washburn University are taking part in the research project by putting up posters in their libraries and encouraging students to fill out damage reports.

Two inventories will be used in the research at Farrell, Birney said. The first inventory will tell how much damage exists overall, and the second inventory will tell which areas of the library have the most damage.

"Mutilation has taken place since the beginning of time. Materials would be used by a group, but abused by a few," Birney said.

Birney said that today "the most abused journal in the library is the swimming suit edition of Sports Il-

Group honors Acker with farewell reception

By The Collegian Staff

The University community honored resigning University President Duane Acker and his wife, Shirley, during a reception Sunday at the Manhattan Holiday Inn

The reception, which took place in the Holidome's Regency Ballroom, was attended by the Ackers' friends and associates from the University.

Refreshments were served and background piano music was provided as the president informally chatted with about 50 people who attended the reception.

The reception gave Acker's friends the opportunity to wish him farewell and good luck at his new job.

Acker announced last June he would leave the University effective June 30, 1986, bringing his 11-year term to an end.

Acker accepted a post with the U.S. Agency for International Development as director for food and agriculture. He will relinquish the K-State presidency to Jon Wefald, chancellor of a seven-school university system in Minnesota.

Several K-State singing groups also paid tribute to Acker and his wife with a performance Sunday evening in McCain Auditorium.

Using common sense as magical study aid

As finals approach, campus and perform well. stress levels become nearly palpable, and many students turn to "all-nighters" and cramming to prepare for final exams. But in the process, these students may be hurting themselves more than they help.

Well-rested, well-fed and wellprepared students do well on exams. Avoid last minute cramming sessions - instead, prepare in advance for the exams and make sure there is time for the usual amount of sleep the night before the test.

Coffee, pizza, hamburger and soft drink manufacturers make a killing come finals week, because these are the staple foods of many students.

While no one suggests that a double-cheese, pepperoni, mushroom and green pepper pizza is a detriment to academic achievement, a well-balanced diet will help students stay alert

Stimulants, especially illegal ones, are hardly the way to prepare for exams. "Speeders" are not only harmful to the body, but preparing for finals on speed actually decreases a student's retention level.

Finally, aside from standard methods of preparation, students facing finals should consider trying to reproduce the examination environment as much as possible while studying. Few instructors this year will be offering exams to students who are lying on their backs with a pizza in hand and listening to a portable radio.

Finals are not the end of the world, and the trauma can be decreased further by careful, thorough preparation and approaches to studying that help, rather than hinder.

Entire world hurt by negligence of Soviets

The meltdown at the Chernobyl nuclear power plant in the Soviet Ukraine last week was not only a tragedy for the Soviet Union, but also for Europe, which has been left to deal with the clouds of radiation drifting toward it from the east.

What makes it an even greater tragedy for the Europeans is that they had no warning of the disaster immediately after it happened, and so could take no preventive measures. Instead, the Soviets chose to wait until three days after the accident before informing the rest of the world.

While it is understandable that the Soviets had a lot to deal with in the immediate aftermath of the disaster, they should have taken the responsibility to inform others who would be affected by it. It is to their detriment that they did not.

"The Soviet Union has an obligation and duty to the international community to give the fullest possible explanation of what happened and why," said Britain's foreign secretary, Sir Geoffrey Howe, during a West European ministers' meeting.

Howe is right. Not only should the Soviets have taken the responsibility of sharing information about the disaster before, they should now also take the responsibility to fully discuss the accident with the rest of the world so options and preventative measures for everyone affected by the accident may be discuss-

The Soviet Union, however, has chosen instead to throw "a wall of near-total secrecy around what happened." In an interview Wednesday, a Ukrainian Health Ministry official said he was "not authorized to tell you anything." This is the wrong attitude to take in this situation. Information about the disaster needs to be shared so appropriate measures can be taken. The rest of the world has valuable information useful to the Soviets if only the full details of the accident are disclosed.

Nuclear accidents are not to be taken lightly. Nor is the radiation resulting from such accidents. A show of honesty and information from the Soviets about the cause and effects of the accident would benefit not only them, but also the rest of the world.

Learning lesson of coliseum fiasco

When President Duane Acker met with a small group of students, including myself, in February, the Fred Bramlage Coliseum project was mired in budgetary problems. Acker explained that the main thing he had learned from the coliseum controversy was that the longer someone tries to hold diverse groups together on a single project, the more difficult the task becomes.

As a student who has been actively involved on the coliseum issue over the last 15 months, I find much evidence to counter his belief that the problems have been primarily a question of loyalties. Ever since coliseum concerns first appeared in the press last spring, criticism has centered on the lack of planning for this large, student- and alumnifunded project.

At a public institution like K-State, a plan is something that can be shown to the public. A scheme is something that must be kept secret. It appears that the coliseum has been based on a scheme, not a plan.

To obtain coliseum documents from the administration, students had to telephone Attorney General Robert Stephan to implement the Freedom of Information Act. Getting press access to the Coliseum Program Committee required an official ruling by Stephan's office. Once access was obtained, University officials, and an alumnus, began holding small unofficial meetings with coliseum architect Bill Livingston before each of the program committee meetings.

In addition, Vice President for Administration and Finance George Miller, who chairs

the program committee, has provided false information to students on at least four separate occasions over the last nine months. This shows a strong pattern of avoiding public scrutiny of the decision making process, or scheming.

Despite what administrators would like the public to believe, there has been widespread dissention about the coliseum scheme among University employees. The chief University architect on the project, Vince Cool, expressed his disgust in an internal memorandum more than one year ago. The former University planner, Robert Jackson, believes he was fired due to his vocal opposition to the poor planning process. This March, the University Long Range Planning Committee refused to endorse the latest coliseum drawings, and elected to express concern about the planning process.

Though the administration has repeatedly emphasized that a new coliseum will prove to be a good recruiting tool for the basketball team, the project has never been publicly supported by former basketball coach Jack Hartman. Athletic Director Larry Travis has expressed reservations about the project, because of the financial burden it shall place on his department.

To me, the incident which most exemplifies the whole coliseum experience occurred at the end of the meeting with Acker in February. As he was ushering us out the door, I asked Acker if he would consider performing any type of written analysis to determine what would be the best course of action for the University as a whole. He told me not to worry because there were many dedicated individuals working on the project. He added with a smile, as he placed both hands on his forehead, "It's all up here. It's all up here."

That indicated to me where the coliseum problems originated. In his decision making, Acker has not relied on plans. He has neglected the vast planning resources available to him within the University, including the University master plan, the Long Range Planning Committee and advice from the Department of Planning and Architectural Services

The lesson to be learned is that in dealing with large amounts of contributed funds, there is an implicit responsibility to the contributors which decision makers must uphold. They must see that those funds are utilized to the satisfaction of the contributors by performing professional studies and establishing plans which can be subjected to

Johnson relies on cabinet's advice

An effective student body president must be an energetic and charismatic type of individual. But that person must also rely on the organization and dedication of people advising him and working on his projects and problems. The persons I am referring to are members of Steve Johnson's cabinet.

As chief of staff of Steven's cabinet, it is my duty to organize the cabinet's projects and activities throughout his one-year term. I have the responsibility of directing and guiding the cabinet.

This job entitles me to represent Steven at meetings and conferences that he is unable to attend. I might add these meetings are not always interesting, but I always learn a great deal at them.

One issue we have started to tackle is the proposed change in the transcript charge of $1 to $2 for each copy. With this change, there will be no cost for the line schedules issued every semester. According to Don Foster, University registrar, the average cost taken from the total transcript charges of the Big

MIKE KADEL Guest Columnist

Eight schools and K-State's peer institutions is $2 per transcript.

With prices ranging from zero at one peer institution to $5 at another, the administration believes it would be legitimate to raise the transcript charge to $2 for each transcript ordered. The justification for this increase stems from the need for the registrar's office to replace "worn-out" equipment used in transcript production.

Another reason given by University administrators for the change is that their goal is to make the transcript production section a self-supporting entity of the registrar's office while supporting two classified positions.

As a cabinet we have not yet taken a stand on this issue; however, when Steven made his presentations to the living groups and organizations, a majority of students favored leaving the policy as it stands. Currently, there is a $1 charge for a transcript and line schedules cost 50 cents.

John Seitzer, pro-active director of special projects, has done an excellent job of gathering information and visiting administration officials on this issue. Gary Stark, public relations director, has also been busy making arrangements for Steven to visit students and gather more input on this issue.

This is just one issue that Steve's cabinet has been working on and discussing. As a cabinet member, I encourage each student to voice his or her concerns. This type of communication is critical to the effectiveness and future success of student govenment.

Mike Kadel is a junior in bakery science and management and chief of staff of Student Body President Steven Johnson's cabinet.

Foul tax reforms

Editor.

The U.S. House and Senate have been trying to reform our tax code for some time now. We become especially aware of this process whenever Congress threatens to end the tax benefits of some special-interest group usually through their cries of foul play. Well, it appears to be the turn of the graduate students.

In a recent article in the Chronicle of Higher Education, Stacy Palmer reported that the House has included a measure in its tax-overhaul bill that would tax the amount of scholarship and fellowship aid that is not used to pay tuition and certain fees. While this measure would affect both graduate and undergraduate students, it is the graduate student, a major portion of whose stipend goes toward expenses other than tuition, who would be affected the most.

A sampling of only three departments at K-State revealed nine graduate students who would be affected by this measure: five students on cancer reseach training grants and three students on fellowships. Currently this measure is included only in the tax-overhaul bill in the House, but the Senate Finance Committee is considering a similar proposal. John Jonas, a former staff member of the House Ways and Means Committee, was quoted in the article as saying,

"It's vital to get a change in the Senate bill. If it gets included in both the House and Senate bills, it'll take heaven on earth to change it."

In addition, there is another tax provision about which graduate students should be concerned. At K-State, some salaries for graduate research and teaching assistants are non-taxable as provided for under a section of the tax code. However, this section of the code expired at the end of 1985. In the past, Congress has added the provision retroactively when this occurred.

This year, due to concerns about tax reform and the deficit, Congress has not acted. Some universities have already begun withholding taxes from affected salaries. Graduate students cannot and should not adopt a wait-and-see attitude on these issues. Both demand immediate communication with your congressional representative.

Lights necessary

Recently, several students have written letters expressing a concern about the intersection at College Heights and Denison Avenue. We are writing in response to let the University community know that student government is working on a solution to the safety problem at that intersection.

According to city regulations, in order to qualify for a pedestrian crosswalk signal light, an intersection must have more than 600 vehicles and 150 pedestrians each hour for any light hours on an average day.

The Student Affairs and Social Services Standing Committee of Student Senate conducted a traffic and pedestrian flow count on April 9. The results of our study indicate that the intersection does qualify for a crossing

The results of the survey were sent to Jerry Petty, deputy director of public works for the city of Manhattan. We are now awaiting a response to our request. The committee is uncertain about what action the city will take, but we are hopeful that it will be in the best interest of the students. We will continue our efforts to resolve this problem.

Residence hall site of burglaries

By The Collegian Staff

An unidentified man canvassed a number of rooms at Haymaker Hall Friday, taking residents' belongings with him.

Reports from the KSU Police Department say the intruder was a black male, between 5 feet 10 inches and 6 feet 2 inches tall, and had black hair.

"The first report I got was around 10 a.m.," said Scott Kane, Haymaker Hall director and graduate in mathematics. "I received reports from every floor except first and eighth."

Kane said the cash losses totaled $347, and one gold chain was taken. One person who had money taken was Curtis Linscott, junior in marketing.

"I had $50 taken out of my wallet." he said. "I was asleep in bed and he walked in and helped himself."

"Word spread pretty quick and went throughout the floors," Kane said. "Then people came down and said they had things taken. We had a bunch of people say they saw the guy. Others say they saw him knock on doors and walk into some

One person who saw the intruder was Rob Schumann, senior in feed science management.

"I was sitting there studying at my desk and then I heard the doorknob quietly turn. I kind of looked up and there was this black guy with a blue hat and moustache. He said 'Oh, wrong room. I was looking for the sixth floor.' I thought he was up to something because 709 was on my door."

Area planners will consider rezoning plea

By The Collegian Staff

Consideration of a final subdivision plat, a rezoning request and six public hearings face members of the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board at tonight's meeting.

One public hearing will be conducted to consider rezoning a tract of land from multiple-family district to single-family residential district. This property is located in two sections of the city, located east and southeast of campus.

The first area being considered for a change from R-3 to R-2 consists of 31/2 blocks, with the borders being North Sixth Street on the west, North Fifth Street on the east, the alley north of Bluemont Avenue on the north, and Fremont Street to the south. The second area is bordered by Claflin Road on the north, Tenth Street on the east, and Manhattan Avenue on the west. The southern, jagged border runs along Kearney, Thurston and Bertrand streets.

The R-2 zoning limits construction to duplexes and single-family homes. The R-3 zoning permits apartment house building if square-footage requirements are met.

Neighborhood concerns regarding the impact of high-density housing in traditionally low- and mediumdensity areas led to the hearing.

The board meets at 7 p.m. in the City Commission Room of the Manhattan City Administration building, 11th Street and Poyntz Avenue. The meeting is open to the public.

Sanctuary

cultivated it. They continued to protest, Juan said, because they didn't have title to the land.

"Finally they asked for a certain date when they would get the papers, and the government said OK," Juan said. "On that day, the government came with its helicopters and its soldiers and killed all the people. They also burned a cooperative in a nearby village. My uncle was burned alive during that raid."

Juan Antonio and his family are few of the estimated 600,000 Central Americans living in the United States illegally, said Duke Austin, Immigration and Naturalization Service spokesman in Washington, D.C.

"They are breaking the immigration law of the United States. You must have documents to enter the United States just as you do in any other country of the world," Austin said.

In Fiscal Year 1984, 328 Salvadorans were granted political asylum by the INS and 13,045 were denied. Of 761 Guatemalans who applied for political asylum that year, three were granted it, making the rate of acceptance of Guatemalans less than 1 percent.

In 1985, the INS granted asylum to 11 Guatemalans and denied 427, Austin said.

Robin Semer, of the Chicago Religious Task Force on Central America, said although the INS may not have a specific classification for Guatemalan and Salvadoran refugees, "all indications" are that they are classified as economic refugees.

"Political-asylum applications come back denied and they say 'We think you're here only to find employment," she said.

"That's not true," Austin said.
"The government doesn't classify them as anything. If they were all classified as economic refugees, 11 of them wouldn't have been granted asylum," he said.

"The granting of asylum was never meant to be a substitute for (entering the country through proper channels). It's only a relief for those few who could establish they would be persecuted if they returned."

Semer said there has been a "tremendous genocide" against the indigenous population of Guatemala by government forces.

"Whether they as individuals are targeted doesn't matter. They are all in danger of being killed," she said.

"If they told us to go back today," Juan Antonio said, "they might as well go ahead and shoot us right now, because it's easier to be shot here than to go back and be tortured and be killed little by little.

"Because in Guatemala, they start with your eyes and then your nose and your ears, or they chop off your fingers or you don't eat for weeks, and little by little you die. President Reagan thinks that none of this goes on, but it really does."

Guatemalans and Salvadorans in this country hope the U.S. government will grant them "extended voluntary departure" status. This would mean nationals of a designated country, no matter what their legal status in the United States, would be granted temporary permission to remain. It has been used in the past to avoid deporting persons to conditions of natural disaster or civil strife which would place them in unusual danger.

"Extended voluntary departure is something that has always been implemented at the request of the State Department as a tool for foreign policy," Austin said. "The administration does not support the idea that EVD should be granted to Central Americans.

"It would be a very bad signal to say anyone from Central America would be welcome here. We don't see that as any solution to the Central American situation," Austin said. "If we let them in, we'd only let the good people come to the United States. How will Central America ever get better if all the good people are in the United States?"

Austin estimates that nearly 2 million aliens will be apprehended this year. Of the INS' total budget of $600 million, 20 percent or more is spent on detaining and deporting undocumented aliens. In addition, Austin said, the U.S. Border Patrol has a yearly budget of $163 million.

Those who support the refugees say they are here legally under the U.N. Protocol Relating to the Status of Refugees, which the United States signed in 1968, and which was incorporated into the U.S. Refugee Act of 1980. Under the Protocol, a "refugee" is one who has a "well-founded fear of being persecuted for reasons of race, religion, nationality, political opinion or membership in a particular social group."

Neither law grants a right to asylum or a right to enter the country. However, they do grant protection against deportation to the country of persecution. .

Last year, 1.2 million undocumented aliens were sent back to their countries of origin, Austin said. About 4,700 were from El Salvador. No deportation figures were available for Guatemala.

For Juan Antonio, and for 22 other Guatemalans, there is a place to run. They now live in or near Manna House of Prayer, Concordia.

Three years ago, the 13 workers at Manna House decided to open their doors to Central American refugees, becoming the 40th publicly declared sanctuary in the country. Since then, more than 200 Salvadorans and Guatemalans have passed through Manna House on the "underground railroad," a network of volunteers who agree to shelter and transport undocumented aliens to places of safety. There have been three births and one death at the Manna House sanctuary.

The national sanctuary movement began in 1982 when a Presbyterian congregation in Tucson, Ariz. declared its church a sanctuary for a Salvadoran family. Today there are more than 300 sanctuaries in the United States, including 19 cities and 12 universities, Semer said. New Mexico became the first state to declare sanctuary on Good Friday of this year.

Those declaring themselves sanctuary agree to shelter refugees in order to publicly protest U.S. policy in Central America. Manna House is the only publicly declared sanctuary in Kansas.

"We operate on the policy that whoever comes to our door — it's not an accident that they come. It's the Lord who has sent them," said Manna House worker Mary Kay Meyer.

Meyer said accepting the refugees was just an extension of Manna House's mission statement — to help those in need. Since it was opened in 1978, the house has been used to shelter transients, battered women and runaways.

For the first time, however, the workers at Manna House were faced with the consequences of what they consider their Christian duty.

Smuggling or harboring of undocumented aliens is a felony and carries a $2,000 fine and five-year sentence for each alien aided. Conspiracy to harbor carries a $10,000 fine and or a five-year sentence.

"It's nothing we entered into lightly," Meyer said. "We're law-abiding people. But we said God is in authority in our house and we saw this as a call from God to put some legs under our prayers."

About two weeks after making the decision, they received their first call from the "underground railroad." They were asked to prepare lunch and provide a place to rest for four men from El Salvador.

Refugees escape to camps, still running for their lives

For many Guatemalan and Salvadoran refugees, the journey out of their homelands ends in refugee camps along the southern border of Mexico.

About 25,000 Guatemalan refugees live in 62 camps along the Guatemalan-Mexican border, said Beth Graybill, administrative director of Peace for Guatemala, a Washington-based fund-raising organization which assists Guatemalan refugees outside of the United States. An additional 19,000 refugees have been relocated by the Mexican army farther north in the Yucatan Peninsula, she said.

Sister Beatriz Zapata, a worker at the Manna House sanctuary, visited a camp of about 1,500 refugees near Chiapas, Mexico last year

"(The refugees) are all fenced in and their houses are made of just sticks tied together with palm branches on top," she said.

The camp "clinic" is constructed in the same manner. Health workers take care of immediate first-aid needs and teach basic hygiene. Malaria is a problem in the camps, Zapata said.

The camp also has a school.
"I'm not sure who teaches, but they do have something to teach reading and writing in Spanish," she said.

Although Spanish is the official language of Guatemala, 23 Indian languages are used with 120 dialects. Spanish is a second language to most Guatemalan peasants.

"The people live on a steep hill no place to plant a garden or no water to grow a garden." There's one source of drinking water, but it is contaminated and harbors parasites, she said.

Churches in the area bring in food and supplies which are stored in the camp warehouse.

"There's definitely nothing extra in the camp," Zapata said. "There's enough food, but I don't think there's enough to make for healthy diets."

The camp's breakfast program provides one meal a day for the small children, Zapata said. "But you can tell with the children. Their hair is dull. There are distended stomachs.

"They are simply existing in the camps," she said. "It's a matter of 'We had to flee and this is where we came to and this is where people are helping us.' I don't think people can exist in camps like that. There's nothing they can do there, so it's just a matter of waiting until the time when they can go back (to Guatemala). It's very much like a concentration camp."

Crossing the border does not guarantee their safety, Zapata said, because the Guatemalan military raids the border camps.

"Francisco," a refugee at Manna House, lived in a camp close to the Guatemalan border. While he was there, a nearby camp was raided by the Guatemalan army and many of the refugees were killed, he said.

"The news from Guatemala following the attack was that Gen. Mejia Victores (then president of Guatemala) said if his army had known what the guerrilla army was doing to the poor refugees they would have gone to stop them," Francisco said. "But we all knew it was not the guerrillas, but the Guatemalan authorities in uniform and sent by their chiefs, who had come to Mexico to kill Guatemalan away from the border, it's harder for people to cross and come into Mexico," Zapata said. "But you never know if you're going to be sent back to Guatemala or if you're going to be sent to a different place."

Graybill said those in the border region are better off because they have the support of the Catholic church. They are also allowed more movement, and are able to live in family groups. Those in the Yucatan were moved against their will by the Mexican army and the relocations are often violent, she

"The pregnant women were in one group, the elders in another with doctors, and the young men ages 18 to 24 were in a separate vehicle," he said. "Later a Mexican from a nearby town told us the group of young men was taken to Guatemala not to Campeche, and he said the bodies of eight of them had come floating down the Grijalva River, many of them tied up, some without heads, some without

Francisco said a Mexican Immigration official confirmed the information. "I do not understand how they could tell us it was safe to return to Guatemala when the very evidence of the killing going on there came floating into Mexico in the rivers," he said.

"We were afraid to get into vehicles to be transported anywhere because we were afraid they would take us directly to Guatemala, and later our bodies, too, would appear mutilated in the river."

running for his life? I'd want someone to say 'Come in Greg. I'll give you some dinner. I'll give you a place to rest. I'll hear your story.'

"So we heard their stories. One young man had just seen one too many pile of bodies. He and his friends were riding their motorbikes down a country road and saw a pile of bodies," she said. "Their heads were cut off so they couldn't be identified. The military came along and made them go on down the road and pick up the heads and put them in plastic bags.

"If I had any doubt, it was gone that day," Meyer said.

time the potential cost of what we were doing. None of us wants to go to jail," Meyer said. "I'm pretty freespirited. I'm not looking forward to going to jail. But for us it won't be the end of the world. We'll get out eventually. But for (the refugees) it will be. If they go home there's no doubt in my mind they won't live two weeks

"For me, there are worse things than going to jail for what you believe in," Meyer said. "One thing that's worse is not caring enough about anything that you would be willing to go to jail for it.

"We say we are a Christian nation and the scriptures are very clear how Christians will be judged," Meyer said. "We're going to be judg-"I also experienced for the first ed by how we treat each other. So you count the cost of doing it, but you count the cost of living with yourself if you don't do it.

When I think about World War II, I ask myself, 'Where were all the good Germans?' The same thing is happening here," Meyer said. "Forty years from now if there is planet earth, will people say, 'Where were the good North Americans when genocide was going on south of their borders? Who in America is saying 'No, this is wrong?' Sanctuary gives me a chance to say no to evil in our time.'

The refugees stay at Manna House for their first few weeks in sanctuary until private living quarters can be found. Each of the four families under the protection of Manna House are now living in their own homes in Concordia and are basically self-supported, said Sr. Judy Stephens, sanctuary worker. Juan Antonio, his 15-year-old son and several other Guatemalans work at a dairy farm near Concordia. They also work for several farmers in the area picking strawberries and asparagus.

Ten of the children attend public school in Concordia.

"The school was cooperative," Stephens said. "The superintendent published in the paper that some Guatemalan students were going to begin school and that by law they had a right to public education. When that came out in the paper, it sort of set everybody's mind at ease.

The students take courses such as physical education, music, art and mathematics until they have a grasp on the language, Stephens said.

"In this town everybody speaks English and always has. They've not needed to have any bilingual education or provide for that," Stephens

Most of the children are working on three languages - Spanish, English and Kanjobal, their native Indian tongue. Most of the adult refugees are illiterate.

'In each case, the children were placed in a classroom with a teacher who would be accepting and able to help, and I appreciated that," Stephens said.

David Burch, freshman in travel and tourism at Cloud County Community College in Concordia, has worked informally with the refugees at Manna House. He said there has been some negative reaction to the sanctuary in Concordia.

"It seems like a lot of people feel they're economic refugees, that they're here to get rich and they're not," Burch said. "They're here to save their lives and that's the only reason. They don't enjoy staying in the United States. It's not their country and the culture is really different.

'At first, it seemed like (Concordia residents) didn't really want them here," Burch said. "Now that they've been here - one of the families for three years - Concordia is getting used to them and they see that they're not bad people. They haven't done anything to hurt Concordia."

Stephens said the community's reaction to the sanctuary has been positive for the most part.

'The Guatemalans have been in all the stores enough and in school enough and in the hospitals and doctors' offices, and have had enough visibility that I think the people in town have accepted them and gotten used to the fact that they're here," Stephens said.

After the refugees have been in sanctuary for about six weeks, they often become depressed, Stephens

"About every other week, they're packing their bags and leaving and then they change their minds," Stephens said. "They always say they're going to Mexico and they never do it. Or if not there, to some other sanctuary in the United States, or maybe just to Florida to work. They always have an idea of where they're going. They don't have any roots here except us.'

"What (the refugees) have to teach us is great," said sanctuary worker Sr. Beatriz Zapata. "There's tremendous insight and energy and hope. I think if I were them, I'd just want to lay down and die."

Zapata said the parents are concerned that their children will be so "Americanized" they won't want to return to Guatemala.

"It's very easy to be seduced by the consumerism we have here, Zapata said. "It's part of the reality of immigration. I remember some of the teen-agers saying to me, 'I was walking through this place and there were heads and pieces of body all over.' How do you cope with that? How do you reconcile all that after you've seen bodies all torn up, after you've fled, and now you're sitting here and you're going to school and everybody wears designer jeans and they wear white high-top shoes and your hair is styled and you're trying to fit into that system?

'There's a repression, especially in teen-agers, to try to forget everything they've seen, everything they've lived, in order just to continue to live or to exist. Being seduced by what is here is a good way of hiding all that pain you have."

The future for the refugees and those involved with the sanctuary movement is unclear.

During the last year, the INS has begun to crack down on sanctuary workers. Last week, six sanctuary workers in Tucson, Ariz., were convicted and are expected to be sentenced in July. The arrests came after a 10-month INS investigation in which undercover agents infiltrated churches to tape record meetings of sanctuary activists.

Austin said although there is no enforcement effort against sanctuary workers per se, individuals will continue to be prosecuted. "We will continue to go forward, no matter what their motive is, no matter what group they're supported by," he said. "I think the fact that Cerezo was elected president, the thought is going to be that everything's OK and they can go back," Stephens said. "But the situation doesn't seem to have changed much."

Zapata said the goal is to work themselves out of a job so the Guatemalans could go home and there would be no need for sanc-

"What I do know about Guatemala is that the war is very young. We're looking into a long haul of a civil war.

"I know sometimes it becomes overwhelming to think about it when you just sit there day after day after day and the grind just seems to go on, the same old damn thing," Zapata said. "But three years ago there were 40 sanctuaries in the country. Today there are more than 300. It's growing every day and the support is there every day.

"Something is being called out of us and I think the faith is probably more alive right now than it has been in years. I read a scripture and for once I can say, 'God, I feel good. People are really trying to live this,' and that gives me a lot of hope."

For the refugees, planning for the future is impossible, Zapata said.

"I don't think there's a refugee in this sanctuary who can say what he wants," Zapata said. "For you to ask them to dream about the future, there is no future. The reality is today and the reality might be tomorrow, but beyond that there's just no existence.'

"The sanctuary movement isn't going to save Central America." Meyer said. "Manna House isn't going to save Guatemala. But the moral difference between doing something and doing nothing is Juan Antonio said he and his family would like to return to Guatemala "if God is so big that there will be peace someday. After all," he said, 'that's the land that saw us be born.

"We'll never be free because we'll never have documents. We're just here. We're just trying to live."

'Much Ado About Nothing' to open 1986 summer season

By RENEE BEAUDOIN Collegian Reporter

The Summer Repertory Theatre will open its fifth season with William Shakespeare's "Much Ado About Nothing," the first of three plays being performed during the 1986 season.

"Much Ado About Nothing" is a witty love play full of humorous characterizations.

In a repertory season, the plays are performed on a rotating basis. This season, the performances will rotate Wednesday through Saturday from July 9 through August 2. This will be the first season in Nichols Theatre for summer rep, which will move from the Purple Masque

In addition to "Much Ado About Nothing," the company will perform 'Chapter Two' by Neil Simon and "Curse of the Starving Class" by Sam Shepard.

"Curse of the Starving Class" is a play of eloquent intensity, whirlwind farce and resonantly poignant insight into family relationships.

"Chapter Two." said to perhaps be Simon's most mature work, is a lovely, whimsical, touching and always funny look at not-so-new love.

"We have a tradition of doing contemporary, challenging plays that are important," said Lew Shelton, associate professor of speech. "We try to do things that we couldn't do during the regular academic year.

'The Shakespeare play will be a challenge with a small cast," Shelton said. "Yet, Nichols Theatre is set up perfectly for the way Shakespeare

K-State takes 3 of 4 from Cyclones

By TIM FITZGERALD Assistant Sports Editor

There was a lot at stake when K-State and Iowa State played Sunday afternoon at Frank Myers Field.

Despite the fact both teams had been eliminated from contention for the Big Eight Conference Tournament, the Wildcats and Cyclones were fighting for pride and to stay out of the cellar of the Big Eight.

The must-win game was set up by the 'Cats sweeping the first three games of the series from the Cyclones, but Iowa State bounced back to claim Sunday's key game

The weekend started out very well for K-State. The 'Cats entered the four-game series at 2-18 in the Big Eight and took the first game

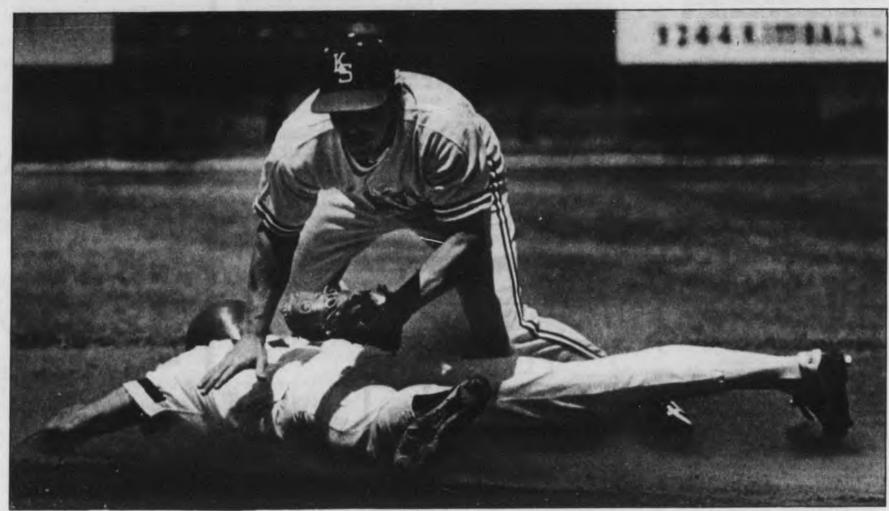

Wildcat starter Rocky Ferguson struck out eight Cyclones and spread out nine hits to get the complete-game win for K-State.

"I haven't been able to get through the middle innings (this season). This was by far my best outing - it was the best I've thrown my curveball all year," Ferguson

A key play in the game came in the bottom of the third with Wildcats on first and second and two outs. Kevin Ellis hit a shot at Cyclone third baseman Pat Kelly, who bobbled the ball and then raced to step on third base before the sliding Scott Gilbert.

Kelly, the Cyclones, most of the press box and even K-State Coach Gary Vaught thought Kelly won the race, but the third base umpire waved Gilbert safe and K-State went on to score three runs with two a 8-6 deficit to score one run in the bottom of the fifth and add two more in the sixth, when Otto Kaifes and Kevin Ellis hit RBI singles, to win the game 9-8.

Iowa State fumbled, tumbled and bumbled its way through the second game on Saturday, committing seven errors as K-State won 5-2. Cyclone starter Steve Howser gave up no earned runs, but the Cyclones didn't back him up as Brad Harvick went the distance for the Wildcat

The Cyclones bounced back on Sunday, though. Playing in gusts of wind up to 50 mph, the Cyclones looked like a new team downing the 'Cats. K-State managed 10 hits, but as earlier in the season, the Wildcats were unable to come up with the key hits to score runners in K-State starter Jeff Peterson and reliever Tom Smith gave up 10 walks in the first four innings and K-State was unable to recover from an early 4-1 deficit.

The victory felt good for Cyclone coach Bobby Randall. A 1969 graduate of K-State, the win was Randall's first at K-State as Iowa

"We didn't play well this whole series. Defensively and pitchingwise, we played pretty well (Sunday). Offensively we did just so-so. I can't figure out how we scored seven runs," Randall said.

The game brought to an end a long conference schedule for the Wildcats, as K-State finished the Big Eight season at 5-19 and in the cellar of the conference.

Leonard pitches KC to victory

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. -Friends of Dennis Leonard say his remarkable comeback has been the product of talent, determination and grit.

But after giving up only three hits in seven shutout innings Sunday in pitching the Kansas City Royals to an 11-1 rout of the Baltimore Orioles, Leonard isn't sure himself exactly what's going on.

"I don't even want to try to figure it out right now," he said. "That's something I don't know."

The three-time 20-game winner raised his record to 3-2 and lowered his earned-run average to 0.73. He did it against the same team he was facing in May 1983, when a knee injury almost wrecked his career. After four operations and a three-year rehabilitation program, he has returned in spectacular fashion.

In 37 innings, he has allowed five walks, recorded 20 strikeouts and has surrendered just three earned runs. His two losses were both by 2-1 scores and in one he pitched a two-hitter.

"He should be 5-0," Royals Manager Dick Howser said. "He's pitched great. But forget the 5-0. He's happy just to be here, and we're sure happy to have him with us.'

When pressed for an explanation, Leonard points to the Midwest's unusually warm weather this spring and his development of an off-speed pitch.

"It's the first time this early in the year we've gotten real good weather and I never liked pitching in frigid weather," he said. "And I've been able to get my breaking pitches over when I wanted to and change speeds a lot better.

'In 1982 and '83 I was just learning how to throw the changeup effectively. I might have lost a little bit off my fastball. But if I can change speeds and be a little smarter out there, I can make the fastball look better.

Leonard struck out four and walked one. Reliever Steve Farr gave up Mike Young's RBI single in the ninth inning.

The Royals supported Leonard with a season-high 17 hits. Lonnie Smith, after missing 16 games with an ankle injury, returned with two singles and a triple.

Smith singled off Scott McGregor, 2-3, and Willie Wilson doubled in the first inning and George Brett and Frank White hit sacrifice flies. Jim Sundberg singled in the second and scored on Smith's tri-

Sigma Phi Epsilon wins intramural title

By The Collegian Staff

Fraternity division champion Sigma Phi Epsilon blasted residence-hall-winner Moore 5, 20-10, to win the All-University intramural softball title Sunday at the L.P. Washburn softball fields.

"We've lost one game in three years and have finally reached the peak by winning the All-University title," Sig Ep Doug Scheibe said.

Moore 5 jumped to an early lead in the top half of the first inning scoring two runs. However, they stranded three runners to end the top half of the first.

The Sig Eps responded with nine runs in the bottom of the first to take a 9-2 lead.

Moore 5 cut the lead to four by scoring three runs in the top of the second.

But the Sig Eps again scored nine runs in the bottom of the second to take an 18-5 lead.

Both teams scored one run in the third inning.

In the top of the fourth, Moore 5 scored four runs to cut the Sig Ep lead to nine and keep themselves in the game, due to the 10-run rule being in effect.

The Sig Eps came up in the bottom of the fourth needing just one run to win the game and got it when the first batter hit a shot to right field and stretched a triple into a home run when a dropped tag at home plate resulted in a

Chris Anderson of Moore 5 was critical of the 10-run rule that resulted in the game being called after four innings.

"A 10-rule is absurd in an All-University game. We scored more than 10 runs in an inning during many games this season and even scored four in the fourth inning today to keep the game going," he

Wildcat track teams compete Saturday in Iowa State meet

By TOM PERRIN Sports Editor

Despite what Coach Steve Miller called "uninspiring" conditions, the K-State track and field teams still managed to accomplish what they set out to do in Saturday's Veishea Invitational meet at Ames, Iowa.

The Wildcats qualified one more competitor - Anne Stadler in the 3,000-meter run - for the NCAA outdoor meet and had other athletes set school- and personal-best marks as "The level of competition was not that good," Miller said. "It was one of those meets where you're just happy it's over with. We needed a meet, we went up there, we competed and that was it. Nobody was very enthusiastic.'

Miller said much of the lack of enthusiasm was caused by cold and windy weather conditions in Ames and the long (141/2 hour round-trip) drive it took K-State to get there.

K-State's high jumpers were again lifetime best. in top form, with both Rita Graves best marks.

Graves broke her own school and personal record in the high jump, clearing 6-2, which was also the fourth best mark by an American woman this year.

"It's been a long time coming for Rita," Miller said. "I'm really excited for her. She's made some good adjustments and it couldn't have come at a better time.

Miller also said Graves had some "good attempts" at 6-31/2.

Speer, despite being slowed by a cold throughout last week, still was able to jump a school record of 7-312 for the third meet this season and took second in the high jump. Miller said Speer was close on attempts at

Miller was also pleased with Stadler's NCAA-qualifying time (9:23.6) in the 3,000, which was a

"I was very impressed by her and Brad Speer either breaking or time," Miller said. "That's (the tying all-time K-State and personal- 3,000) the event where we wanted to run her in the NCAA's, so I'm glad she qualified."

Other K-State winners included Michelle Maxey in the 400-meter run (54.7), Jacque Struckhoff in the 1.500-meter run (4:26.0) and Gary Arpin in the javelin (195-11).

Placing second were Kim Kilpatrick in school-record time in the 100-meter hurdles (13.6) and Doug Brown in the javelin (189-3).

Third-place finishers were Bryan Carroll in the 5,000-meter run (15:15.6), Kenny Harrison in the 200-meter dash (21.1), Mike Smith in the 100-meter dash (10.85) and Felicia Carpenter in the 400-meter hurdles (1:02.8).

K-State will take next week off to prepare for the Big Eight outdoor meet in Boulder, Colo., May 16 and

K-State considering suit against NCAA

By TONY CARBAJO Sports Writer

Athletic Director Larry Travis said the athletic department is exploring legal action if the National Collegiate Athletic Association fails to restore the eligibility of basketball star Norris Coleman for next season. K-State is preparing to go before the NCAA's eligibility subcommittee later this month with Coleman's appeal case. The subcommittee is the final appeal process K-State can take with the NCAA. But Travis indicated the University is prepared to continue the fight to get Coleman reinstated should the appeal process become exhausted without Coleman's basketball eligibility at K-State being restored.

"We're looking into the possibility of legal action," Travis said. "We are just trying to explore all the avenues available to us.'

The NCAA eligibility committee previously ruled that Coleman could not play for K-State until February 27, 1987, the date one year after the University ruled him ineligible.

The NCAA ruling said Coleman, however, could become immediately eligible if he transferred to another Division I school. The committee ruled Coleman's high school grades at Paxon High School in Jacksonville, Fla., were not sufficient to merit financial aid.

Travis said the NCAA is only considering Coleman's high school transcript and not the length of time he spent playing "organized basketball" in the U.S. Army. The number of years he spent playing basketball on various armed forces teams "is not a factor" before the subcommittee

'The NCAA is sometimes so confused themselves that they sometimes don't know what is going on," Travis told The Kansas City Times. "They make judgements where they don't take into consideration the student-athlete.

'We need some revisions. The NCAA needs a long hard look at what they're doing. They're off in their own little world at times. There are so many inconsistencies.

K-State's appeal to the eligibility sub-committee is expected to be heard later this month, although an exact date has not been set. Coleman has retained the services of Topeka attorney Jeff Schemmel.

"Right now we are getting all our material together to bring before the NCAA (eligibility sub-committee)," Travis said. "We are in the process now of gathering more information."

Travis said several schools have contacted him about talking to Coleman concerning the possibility of transferring. Travis, however warned them about NCAA tampering charges that are still in effect until K-State uses all possible appeal op-

"No one can talk to Norris without going through our department," Travis said. "We're going to insist on the rule being upheld. If we find anyone tampering with the young man, we'll turn it over to the NCAA.'

Ferdinand wins Kentucky Derby

By The Associated Press

LOUISVILLE, Ky. - Basking in the glow of Ferdinand's Kentucky Derby victory, the colt's 73-year-old trainer Charlie Whittingham said Sunday, "If I have one good enough, I'll be back."

"If not, it'll be another 26 years," added Whittingham, whose first Derby win came in his third try. He finished eighth with Gone Fishin' in 1958 and ninth with Devine Comedy in 1960.

Ferdinand was 54-year-old jockey Bill Shoemaker's 24th Derby mount, and The Shoe's fourth winning Derby ride truly was a sentimental journey "He was excited, not winning it for that long, everybody saying, 'Don't you think you're too old?" Whittingham said of Shoemaker's reaction to his first Derby victory since winning with Lucky Debonair in 1965.

His other wins were with Swaps in 1955 and Tomy Lee in 1959. Only Eddie Arcaro and Bill Hartack, each with five, have won more Derbys, and Shoemaker easily is the oldest winning jockey.

The Hall of Fame jockey, Hall of Fame trainer and Ferdinand next will team up in the 1 3/16-mile Preakness May 17 at Pimlico.

That's good news for racing traditionalists. Last year, Spend a Buck, the Kentucky Derby winner, did not run in the other two races of the Triple Crown - the Preakness and the 112-mile June 4 Belmont Stakes. Broad Brush, who finished third in the Derby, and Badger Land, who was fifth, will go to the Preakness. Bold Arrangement, the English-bred colt who finished second in the Derby in his second U.S. start, is scheduled to race in the English Derby June 4 at Epsom. Nancy Reed, co-owner of fourth-place Rampage, said no decision had been made about starting the colt in the Preakness.

No decision has been reached for Snow Chief, the Derby favorite who went into the race with a string of five straight stakes wins but finished 11th after being in contention for the first mile.

Ferdinand's winning time was 2:02 4/5, the slowest since Cannonade won in 2:04 in 1974. Those in the 112th Derby crowd of 123,819 who backed Ferdinand were rewarded with payoffs of $37.40, $16.20 and $6.60.

Ferdinand, who is owned by Elizabeth Keck and was bred by her husband, earned $609,400 from a purse of $784,400, both Derby records.

Other Derby Day records set were the $13,114,331 bet on the 10-race card and the $6,164,119 wagered on the Derby.

Another $19,165,119 was bet at 56 other race tracks in the United States and Canada.

The University of Kansas crew dominated the Big Eight Regatta Saturday in Lawrence, winning every race but one. However, in the feature race of the day, the men's varsity eight.

K-State won the race by "about three feet" according to K-State Coach Don Rose. However, KU protested and was awarded a re-race, saying they had been misdirected by an official. K-State decided not to race again.

The K-State women's softball team played its last game Friday. Not just the last game of the season, but the last game for the program since it has been cut for next year by the athletic department. The team finished seventh of seven teams at the Big Eight Conference Tournament in St. Joseph, Mo., losing to Nebraska in the

Summit

Continued from Page 1 hours contained higher than normal levels of radioactivity. Attributing it to the Soviet nuclear plant accident, they urged Japanese to filter rain water for drinking or washing vegetables.

In another development, renewed prospects for a U.S.-Soviet summit were raised in a message relayed to Reagan from Soviet leader Mikhail S. Gorbachev.

The bearer was Margaret Thatcher, the British prime minister, and it was warmly received by U.S. officials. They said Reagan's invitiation to Gorbachev to visit him in Washington this year still stands.

It was "the first message of any kind" sent to Reagan since the Soviets broke off planning for the summit in retaliation for the U.S. bombardment of Libya nearly three weeks ago, said an official who demanded anonymity.

Reagan assured Thatcher that he remains interested in a summit with Gorbachev this year, the official said.

"I invited him," Reagan told reporters at a reception later. "The invitation is still good."

Gorbachev launched the diplomatic initiative through London as criticism grew over the Soviets' handling of the nuclear accident in the Ukraine. U.S. officials suggested he was trying to burnish an image clouded by Soviet reluctance to provide much information about the disaster

Several hours before Reagan gathered for dinner with Thatcher, Canadian Prime Minister Brian Mulroney, French President Francois Mitterrand, Italian Premier Bettino Craxi, Japanese Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone and West German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, several projectiles were launched in the direction of the State Guest House.

Tokyo Metropolitan Police official Masaru Kato said there was no damage or injuries from the "metallic flying objects," although earlier reports said one of the projectiles started a fire in an apartment block near the embassy.

Insect transmits destructive virus

Wheat mite threatens crops

By BECKY MARTIN Collegian Reporter

A tiny mite, invisible to the naked eye, can cause the destruction of an entire wheat crop.

Wheat streak mosaic is a virus disease carried by microscopic curl mites from diseased plants to healthy plants, said Bill Willis, professor in plant pathology and extension state leader in the plant pathology program.

The disease was discovered in 1949, but has since been studied intensively. Because curl mites are so small - less than .01 inch long - it took years to discover them and to understand the cause of wheat loss, he said.

Under ideal conditions, one adult mite can produce several million offspring within 60 days.

Willis said the symptoms of the disease usually start in early April. The individual plants turn yellow, become wilted and root development is often weak.

Willis said at first he was alarmed about this year's disease rate but, since he made a trip to the Western part of the state to view crops, he believes the severity of the spread is less than he speculated.

"I feel a bit relieved to see that plants I looked at three weeks ago are not spreading severely.

The last severe spread of the disease in Kansas was in 1981, he said. In the past two years, there has been very little loss of the crop due to the disease.

Willis said in severe cases the disease could wipe out the wheat crop in an entire county.

The younger the plant is when the infection occurs, the more severe the spread of the disease will be, he said.

"When I viewed this year's crops it looked like the disease occurred later in the plants' growth. Overall I would have to say that it's a fairly normal rate of severity, but the loss may lean a bit towards the heavy side."

After the disease has reached the plants, there is nothing that can be done to save them, he said.

Willis said there were ways to aid in the prevention of the disease. Herbicides and cultivation can kill mites which survive in the volunteer wheat left from harvest.

"It can be expensive, but less so than taking the risk of losing your whole crop," he said.

Later planting is another way to prevent spread of the disease. The earlier a person plants the seeds, the better the chance for infection, Willis said.

Studies are being conducted to find genes for sources of resistance to the disease.

"We need resistance so that we are able to plant crops early. Planting early helps to avoid other insect problems," he said.

Marathon aids heart research

By MARCIA SULLIVAN Collegian Reporter

Several members of Smith Scholarship House spent Saturday morning on a marathon jaunt of 26.2 miles - on foot. The men were participating in the house's annual cardiac arrest run.

Smith House will be asking the American Heart Association to sponsor next year's race as a benefit for that organization.

The winner of the marathon was Martin Guthrie, freshman in feed science, with a time of 4 hours and 18 minutes. Guthrie said the farthest he had ever run before was 6 miles. The second place runner, Mike Eltze, sophomore in electrical engineering, finished with a time of 4 hours and 41

"I didn't really prepare and I'm paying for it now," Guthrie said.

Guthrie said for the first 15 miles he and another runner stayed together. After that he ran alone and got to a point where he had to walk up the hills

After the race he said he could hardly walk. Guthrie had run on a track team in high school and in an intramural track meet, but had never attempted a marathon.

The race started at Smith House and continued down Poyntz Avenue. The runners raced to a point 2 miles past Zeandale which marked halfway. At that point, the runners turned around and ran the same course back to Manhattan.

Seven men and a relay team of six men began the race, said marathon coordinator Wes Sherman, sophomore in elementary education. Three of the men dropped out of the race due to blisters and injuries.

"It had rained early Saturday morning and there was water standing on the road. Our socks and shoes got wet and caused blisters." Sherman said.

Sherman was wearing an air cast on his ankle and had to quit because

The relay team of six men, who called themselves the "Bud Racing Team," ran the marathon in 3 hours and 15 minutes. Each of the men took turns running 2 mile legs.

Sherman said women from Smurthwaite House helped by driving two cars and a Moped to provide a support system for the runners. They also provided water and bandages.

Sherman said he hoped the event would become a charity benefit for the American Heart Association next year. He said he wanted to make sure the event would be a success so he could ask for sponsorship.

Age changes, but tradition remains. Kite's Bar and Grille, 619 N. 12th, currently a public tavern, will be changing to a private-membership club about June 1, said Terry Ray, Ray has twice been the owner of Kite's, the first time from Jan. 1, 1969, until March 1, 1984. He took over for the second time in January.

"It (the change) will be unfortunate," Ray said. "Our customers who are 19 and 20 will not be able to drink beer with us.'

Ray said every bar will have to eventually change into a club, but "we're just doing it a year ahead" of

"We have no choice - we're being mandated."

He said he is not happy with the change in Kite's, and overall, is disappointed about the change in the drinking law.

"We're discouraged," Ray said. "We thought Kansas had a good law with the drinking age at 18 for beer and 21 for liquor. We feel very badly, but we have to follow the rules."

Ray said he has new marketing plans for Kite's, but due to the competitive nature of Aggieville they could not be disclosed. The change to a private club will not affect the traditions of the establishment, he said. "We're not planning on changing the image, atmosphere or decore of Kite's. We like it and we're planning on accentuating the present atmosphere," Ray said. Although Kite's has been in Aggieville since 1964, the building has served as a student hang-out since the 1920s, when the Shamrock Tavern opened.

Leaders join forces on terrorism issue

By The Associated Press

TOKYO - The United States' major allies, denouncing "blatant" government use of terrorism, gave President Reagan the condemnation of Libya he sought but without endorsing the U.S. bombing raid or an oil boycott. Early Tuesday, crude smoke bombs exploded in at least 19 rail stations.

With a statement on terrorism in place, the leaders met at Akasaka Palace to work out a final summit declaration. "It is economic day here," White House spokesman Larry Speakes said. The leaders were expected to detail a plan designed to stabilize the wild fluctuation in the value of the dollar and other currencies.

While U.S. officials hailed summit unity on terrorism, Foreign Minister Jean-Bernard Raimond said France stands by its policy of not allowing U.S. warplanes to fly over France en route to military strikes against

Neither Italy nor West German, two large importers of Libyan oil, would go along with a U.S.-suggested

As summit leaders gathered for a Tuesday morning session, small bombs went off simultaneously in at least 19 subway or train stations.

The timed devices, apparently smoke bombs filled with Chinese firecrackers, were in little plastic containers, within paper bags, disguised as disgarded lunch boxes, police said.

Officials said no injuries were reported, and said no one had claimed responsibility for the explosions. However, local news reports said police suspect members of an extreme leftist group.

NASA blames short circuit for crash

By The Associated Press

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. - An electrical short circuit may have prematurely shut down a Delta rocket's main engines on liftoff, forcing launch managers to order its destruction, two top NASA officials said Monday.

Bill Russell and Lawrence J. Ross told a news conference they did not know the origin of what Russell said were two "large amplitude spikes," or power surges, during Saturday's aborted launch, but that they could not rule out sabotage as one of the possibilities.

Ross, the head of a newly named

Officials question failure of rocket latest launch disaster, said all three remaining Delta launches this year would be postponed until after the investigation was complete.

He also said he was "pretty sure" a May 22 launch of an Atlas-Centaur rocket carrying a military surveillance satellite would be delayed.

Russell, head of the space agency's Delta project, called the detection of the electrical malfunction in a data

NASA investigative panel into the analysis of the accident "quite a significant find...that could be quite cogent to the problem."

He said the origin of the power surges were "apparently internally induced."

But he cautioned that "you don't jump to conclusions" about where the electrical spikes came from or whether they were the cause of the engine shutdown, the second major space launch failure since the space shuttle Challenger explosion Jan. 28.

"It's the first thing that leaps up from the data," said Ross, emphasizing that the investigation would be a broad one.

In response to questions about possible sabotage, such as a radioed command from an external source, Russell said that was unlikely.

Ross said, however, "There is absolutely no indication that the range (launch managers) or anybody else sent a signal to those receivers.'

The three-stage, 116-foot rocket abruptly lost main-engine power 71 seconds after launch from Cape Canaveral.

New law will add 3 judges to assist in appeal overload

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Gov. John Carlin on Monday signed into law a bill which expands by three the sevenmember Court of Appeals to alleviate a serious backlog of cases which has developed. The three new judges would create a third appeals panel, which was recommended when the Court of Appeals was created in January

Under the new law, the court will be expanded in July 1987. The court has become swamped in a backlog of appeals and for several years has requested the Legislature add a third panel to review cases. Currently, retired judges and sitting district judges often are called upon to leave their courts to help with the appeal overload.

Democrats in the Legislature criticized the bill because it delays expansion until next year. They blamed Republicans, House Speaker Mike Hayden in particular, of playing partisan political games with the issue.

By delaying the expansion, Carlin is denied the plum of appointing three new judges. Democrats fingered Hayden as the culprit because he is running for the GOP nomination for governor in the August primary and the three slots would be his to fill if he wins the nomination and is elected governor in November.

Carlin vetoed a similar bill last year because it contained a provision that would have allowed Chief Justice Alfred G. Schroeder to work past his 70th birthday on June 5 by extending from 70 to 72 the mandatory retirement age for

The Democratic governor has previously appointed Justices Harold Herd and Tyler Lockett to the bench. He also selected Mary Beck Briscoe and J. Patrick Brazil for the Court of Appeals.

Reagan tells U.S. oil firms to leave Libya, abandon assets by June 30

By The Associated Press

TOKYO - The Reagan administration, amid indications the number of Americans in Libya is increasing, has set a June 30 deadline for five U.S. oil companies to pull out of Col. Moammar Khadafy's country, even if they must leave assets behind. The continuing presence of the oil companies, five months after President Reagan ordered a trade embargo and called virtually all Americans home, limits U.S. appeals to Italy and other West European countries to stop buying Libyan oil.

"They will be out one way or the other," Secretary of State George Shultz declared Monday. "They may just have to abandon their assets."

Treasury Secretary James A. Baker III reinforced the warning. "I think it is appropriate at some point to say to U.S. companies that are still there, 'You have had sufficient " Baker said. time,"

At the same time, though, the number of Americans working in Libya appears to be rising. A U.S. official, who demanded anonymity, said there were 500 to 800 working in the country despite the U.S. sanctions and threat of punishment,

It is difficult to estimate the American work force since the U.S. embassy in Tripoli is closed. However, only a few months ago, the State Department estimated about 100 Americans were in the country, most of them spouses of Libyan citizens.

Five U.S. oil companies have remained in operation in Libya despite Reagan's edict last January ordering all Americans out of Libya. They are Conoco, W.R. Grace, Amerada Hess, Marathon and Occidental. There are also six oilrelated service concerns in operation.

Bombs rock Tokyo subway system

TOKYO — Small bombs exploded in several Tokyo subway stations during this morning rush hour, but a police official said there were no reports of injuries.

Police found other explosive devices near the platforms of at least 16 subway stations throughout the capital, said the official, who spoke on the condition of anonymity.

Police halted service on one subway line after finding a small bomb on a platform at 8:10 a.m., about 20 minutes before the series of explosion, the official said.

He added that no group or individual had asserted responsibility for the explosions, which he said were caused by timed devices in paper bags or trash bins.

Local news reports said police suspected members of the left-wing Chukaku-ha — Middle Core Faction — were behind the attacks. The group has vowed to disrupt the economic summit of seven leading industrialized democracies that concludes on Tuesday.

The coordinated blasts occured minutes before summit leaders gathered for a plenary session and at the height of a rush hour involving an estimated 6 million commuters.

Governor signs school finance bill

TOPEKA — Gov. John Carlin on Monday signed into law the Legislature's school finance plan which pumps $9.6 million in new state aid to local school districts in the Department of Education's budget for the 1987 fiscal year.

In the bill, the Legislature added $9.6 million new state aid into the School District Equalization Act, which establishes the formula under which state aid is distributed to local districts.

The total of new funds is just $400,000 shy of the $10 million originally placed in the bill by the Senate. The House had slashed the new aid from the bill in a budget-cutting frenzy by lawmakers trying to avoid a tax increase.

The $400,000 taken from the new aid package was, instead, channeled into the categorical funding for a preschool handicapped education program passed earlier in the session.

As the measure stands, it would put $451.6 million into the school finance formula. The state distributed $442 million in SDEA aid to local districts this year.

Experts estimate property taxes would jump $29.8 million, if all 304 school districts use their full budget authority in the next fiscal year, which starts July 1 which starts July 1.

An earlier bill gave school districts authority to increase their spending by 2 percent if they are above the statewide median in perpupil expenditures and 3½ percent if they are below the median.

The school aid money is in a measure that allows spending of $846 million, including $756 million in state tax dollars, on seven agencies and programs. The total also includes $113 million in state income tax rebates to local school districts and $712 million for the Department of Education and the school finance program.

Killer faces 30 years, $45,000 fine

FALLS CITY, Neb. — A former cult member on Monday received the maximum sentence of 30 years in prison and a $45,000 fine for three convictions after telling the judge he felt "a great sense of loss" about two murders that occurred at the cult's southeast Nebraska farm.

Richardson County District Judge Robert Finn sentenced John David Andreas, 31, to 20 years in prison and a $25,000 fine on a charge of receiving stolen property; five years in prison and a $10,000 fine for carrying a concealed weapon; and five years in prison and a $10,000 fine for second-degree assault.

Finn said the prison terms are to be served one after the other.

Neither Andreas nor his parents, who were present for the hearing, showed any emotion when the sentence was announced.

Andreas lived on a farm near Rulo with a survivalist cult led by Michael Ryan. Ryan was found guilty of first-degree murder in the death of cult member James Thimm. Ryan's 16-year-old son was found guilty of second-degree murder.

Michael Ryan faces a first-degree murder charge in the death of 5-year-old Luke Stice. The bodies of Thimm and Stice were unearthed at the farm by authorities last August.

Andreas and cult member James Haverkamp were stopped by authorities last June near Salem with a piece of farm equipment stolen in Seneca, the night before.

Haverkamp, 26, is to be sentenced Tuesday.

In a plea bargain with authorities, Andreas and Haverkamp agreed to plead guilty to weapons charges in exchange for their testimony against the Ryans in the Thimm murder case.

Judge refuses governor's argument

NEW ORLEANS — A federal judge Monday refused to let Louisiana Gov. Edwin Edwards deliver his own closing argument to the jury in Edwards' racketeering retrial.

Defense lawyers immediately appealed Judge Marcel Livaudais' decision to the 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeal, where a three-judge panel rejected their arguments within minutes of convening.

Edwards, a lawyer, did not question witnesses or participate in earlier parts of the trial. In a surprise move Friday, the defense rested without calling witnesses and Edwards said he wanted to give his own summation.

U.S. Attorney John Volz objected strenuously, and Livaudais agreed that the governor had no standing to make the argument. In not allowing Edwards to speak to the jury, Livaudais agreed with prosecutors that jurors might not be able to distinguish between the closing argument — which is not evidence — and testimony given under oath from the witness stand.

Edwards, arguing before the appeals panel, assured the judges he would stay within bounds in the closing argument and would not attempt to mislead the jurors. Defense attorneys acknowledged that any federal judge has the discretion to not allow a defendant to act as his own lawyer, but they said Livaudais failed to give good reasons.

Cleveland chosen for Hall of Fame

NEW YORK — The heart of rock 'n' roll beats officially in Cleveland, which was chosen Monday as the site of the proposed Rock and Roll Hall of Fame after an intense civic campaign by the city that claims the music as its own.

Ahmet Ertegun, the head of Atlantic Records and chairman of the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame Foundation, announced the selection at a news conference attended by Ohio Gov. Richard Celeste, Cleveland Mayor George Voinovich, U.S. Rep. Mary Rose Oakar and other Ohio officials.

Cleveland, which claims to be the birthplace of rock 'n' roll, won the board's approval over arch-rivals Philadelphia and Chicago by simply 5-1.

Among the cities knocked out of consideration for the Hall of Fame included Memphis and Nashville, Tenn., New Orleans and San Francisco, none of which apparently displayed the esprit of Cleveland.

The selection of Cleveland is contingent on obtaining funds for the museum, which Needell estimated would cost about $20 million, with the money to come from federal, state and local contributions and private fund-raising.

Elvis is said to have made his first concert appearance outside the South in Cleveland in 1955. Before that, according to rock historian Norman N. Nite, the late Cleveland disc jockey Alan Freed coined the term "rock 'n' roll" in about 1950 and promoted the nation's first rock concert in Cleveland on March 21, 1952.

Actor, treasure hunter open chest

KEY WEST, Fla. — Treasure hunter Mel Fisher and actor Cliff Robertson opened a chest from the wreck of a 17th century Spanish ship on live television Monday and found what they were looking for — gold and silver.

"I see some beautiful gold chain right in the middle....They put four pieces of eight in the corners for tight packing," said Fisher, as he lifted the lid on the "CBS Morning News."

The 6-pound wooden box, which is 5 inches long, 4½ inches wide and 3.3 inches thick, was found April 27 at the site of the Nuestra Senora de Atocha.

It was opened during an interview with Robertson, who is portraying Fisher in a television movie about the salvor's life called "Dreams of Gold."

A 1622 hurricane smashed the Atocha, sending it down with its gold, silver and jewels, believed by some experts to now be worth up to $400 million.

Star Trek IV plot remains mystery

ATLANTA — George Takei, who played Mr. Sulu on the popular "Star Trek" television show and three motion pictures, isn't saying much about the plot of the upcoming fourth film in the series.

Takei, in town over the weekend for a science fiction convention, said the cast of "Star Trek IV-The Voyage Home" had to promise not to talk about the plot.

Takei said "Star Trek IV" starts where "Star Trek III-The Search for Spock" ends, on the planet Vulcan where Mr. Spock has just been rejuvenated.

Physician to discuss prevention of AIDS

By The Collegian Staff

Dr. Richard Keeling, director of student health at the University of Virginia in Charlottesville and chairman of American College Health Assistant Task Force on AIDS, will speak about "Knowledge and Prevention of AIDS" at 10 a.m. Wednesday in Union Forum Hall.

Keeling's visit begins a program of lectures designed to educate people about acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

"There is more education on AIDS planned for the University. Keeling's visit will begin the program," said Dr. Jeff Martin, psychologist intern at Lafene Mental Health Center.

Keeling will arrive in Manhattan later today and will give a presentation to the residence halls.

Keeling gave a presentation at the University of Kansas on April 30, Martin said.

"We thought it would be a good idea to have him also come to K-State. It worked out really well with him already planning to visit KU," he said.

"We did a UPC (Union Programs Council) forum on AIDS a week ago and further education for the University is planned. Keeling's visit will be the beginning of a real consequential effort to begin the program," Martin said.

University President Duane Acker reflected on his years at K-State during a reception in his honor Monday in the K-State Union Cottonwood Room.

At the reception, sponsored by the Student Senate executive committee, Acker was presented with Senate resolution 85-86 II honoring him for his contributions to the University community.

Students for Educational Awareness gave Acker the book, "Ending Hunger, An Idea Whose Time Has Come," in conjunction with his appointment to the Agency of International Development as director of food and agriculture.

After the presentations, Acker reflected on his years at the University.

"Each person will look on these past 11 years from their own vantage point," he said.

Some of the things Acker said he will remember from K-State are "the high communication that exists between and among the faculty and administration, the high quality of students and their involvement in University activities as well as the healthy and open debate throughout the University.

The University has had a history of student involvement and leadership, "When I first became University president, I thought a lot of problems would cross my desk dealing with the Student Senate. But there has been essentially none," Acker said.

Acker said he believes the reason for this is the students' leadership.

"As I prepare to leave, I have some pretty good feelings about K-State. I believe the University is doing a good job preparing people," Acker said.

The resolution from Senate was framed and presented to Acker at the farewell reception. Student Body President Steven Johnson, sophomore in agricultural economics, said the resolution was

"We believe they were designed to disrupt things in Tokyo," said Speakes.

The anti-terrorism statement, adopted unanimously by the seven summit partners, would make it harder for those accused of terrorist activity - including diplomats - to cross borders.

It also would ban the export of arms to terrorist states, advocate closing or limiting diplomatic missions of nations that support terrorism and impose tighter immigration and visa requirements.

The statement expands upon measures adopted earlier by the 12-nation European Community, sometimes called the Common Market.

Among measures not included in that earlier gesture are improved extradition procredures for bringing terrorists to trial and denying entry into a country of anyone even suspected of terrorism, according to U.S. officials.

And, while the measure does not specifically mention the use of force, U.S. officials said it doesn't preclude that either.

But by far the most important victory for the Reagan administration was the inclusion in the draft of a section stating that the sanctions would

Reagan to show true intent of U.S. policy

Presidents of several Latin American countries will meet this week in Costa Rica for the inauguration of Costa Rican President-elect Oscar Arias and will discuss details of a Central American peace agreement.

Vice President George Bush will represent the United States at the inauguration, but it is unknown whether he will be an active participant in the talks.

The success of the peace treaty may depend on U.S. action, as members of the Contadora nations hope to reduce foreign military presence in the region.

If the peace treaty is signed, it will be the end of a three-year process in which six Central American countries and seven other Latin American mediating nations have tried to find a workable solution to the situation in Central America.

The process has been adversely influenced by U.S. support for the Contras in Nicaragua. Under the current proposal, the United States would be required to end its support for the rebels seeking to overthrow the Sandinista government in that country.

The Reagan administration has agreed to do that, provided the Sandinistas agree to reduce their armed forces, ending the military superiority the country supposedly has over its neighbors. This would also make Nicaragua more vulnerable to U.S. attack - something they have long feared.

President Reagan has indicated that if the United States unilaterally ends support for the contras, Nicaragua would have 'no incentive" to comply with his desire to dominate the region.

There is now a clear opportunity to make a move for peace in Central America something for which Reagan has claimed to be striving all along. His response to the call will definitely show his true intent in Central America.

Officials must probe Deaver's business ties

The government's top ethics officer asked the Justice Department recently to investigate whether Michael Deaver, a former deputy White House chief of staff who operates a lobbying business, violated conflict-of-interest laws.

Deaver, founder of Michael Deaver & Associates, has said repeatedly that he has not violated the conflict-of-interest law, which carries a penalty on conviction of a $10,000 fine and two years in jail. Federal law prohibits former senior officials from lobbying for two years on issues that were under their control during their final year in office. Additionally, the former officials cannot lobby colleagues with whom they worked in the same office for one year.

For days, details about Deaver's lobbying business, which he set up after leaving public office in May 1985, have appeared in the press. At issue are the implications of his activities on behalf of the governments of Canada, Puerto Rico, Saudi Arabia and Mexico.

Among the allegations against Deaver, who is one of the Reagans' dearest friends, is that he played a role in acid rain matters before he quit his job at the White House and then signed a $105,000 contract with the government of Canada to advise it on acid rain.

Clearly a thorough review of Deaver's business practices is in order. If the allegations of conflict of interest are supported by conclusive evidence, the federal government should make an example of him. Regardless of the verdict, Congress should pass legislation to make it easier for Justice Department officials to prosecute former officials who profit by selling influence gained at the government's expense.

Military ignores budget problems

A victory was won for the American public on Friday. Responding to pressures from the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings balanced-budget law, the U.S. Senate approved a budget that slashes the defense spending request of President Reagan by $20 million. You might ask, why is that a victory?

Over the past five years, the administration has spent over $1 trillion, which amounts to over $4,200 in military spending for each U.S. citizen. The important questions we should ask ourselves are: Are we any safer for spending more than $1 trillion? And what do we really have for spending these funds? And are we getting any bang for our bucks? Perhaps a look back at events of the past five years could shed some light on those questions.

The invasion of Grenada demonstrated something important to our military leaders, namely their lack of coordination. The branches of the military could not communicate with each other because of differences in communications equipment bought individually. Confusion and accidents claimed more lives than the so-called enemy

 Cuban construction workers. This shows the ineffectiveness of the Joint Chiefs of Staff arrangement. Instead of working together, each branch competes for funding and makes procurements individually. Each of the joint chiefs is responsible for their own branch, but there is no single person making sure the military works as a unit. Are we safe? One has to wonder what would have happened if the United States or one of its allies were Another problem began surfacing in 1983-84, when stories were written about $600 hammers, the $1,100 navigators stool cap and the $7,000 airplane coffee machines. Some defense contractors were making a mint overcharging for their products, or actually committing robbery. Part of the problem was in overcharging, but part of the problem lies in overdesigning. The military was not watching its procurement practices and defense contractors took advantage of it. We were not getting any bang for our bucks. Are we any safer now?

MAURICE BAALMAN Guest Columnist

The latest problem in defense spending began showing up as Congress, Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinbeger and the deficitreduction law collided. In 1981-82 enormous sums of money were committed to hightechnology procurements. It is now catching up with them. Prices of Air Force F-16 and F-15 fighter planes have jumped 50 percent above inflation in the last four years. New M-1 tanks cost 45 percent more than in 1981 and the Bradley infantry vehicles cost 64 percent above earlier estimates.

The problem is that Weinberger did not follow a long-term plan. He focused on yearly budget battles with Congress instead of considering long-term costs of leaving Congress with little flexibility. The military inherited an investment that was escalating rapidly in cost. Are we any safer?

The many problems the military faces could be reduced to a lack of coordination between the joint chiefs, wasteful spending and lack of long-term planning. There are solutions that would help improve our nation's defense without spending another $1 trillion. If a single chief of staff was responsible for the military, the branches would be forced to work together and the armed forces' effectiveness would be improved.

If a watchdog division of the military would monitor procurements and punish contractors with large fines for contract abuses we would stand a better chance at getting our money's worth. If the defense secretary was responsible for creating and sticking to long-term policy, the current financial mess could be averted in the future. These are all "ifs." Huge bureaucracies like the defense department move slowly.

Perhaps the move Friday by the Senate will wake up that sleeping bureaucracy. The military will have to either become more efficient and more effective or decrease its operations and influence. If it chooses to coordinate the branches, watch expenses and maintain long-term policy the budget cut will create a better military and thus make us safer. That would be a victory for the American public.

Maurice Baalman is a senior in agricultural economics.

Students need facts on date rape

Recently a friend of mine was driven to a nearby lake by her boyfriend of more than one year and brutally raped. My friend's rape, although not committed by the stereotypical gun-wielding stranger, was extremely devastating. Perhaps this type of rape is more devastating than a stereotypical one, since her trust, love and judgment were destroyed.

This type of action is frequently not labeled as rape because it is committed by a acquaintance or date, but since it is an act of violence it is rape. This type of rape is alarmingly prevalent at K-State and across

According to major studies conducted at schools throughout the United States by an independent psychological research team and the FBI, 25 percent of the women between 18 and 24 years of age have been victims of rape or attempted rape. Of these, 90 percent were committed by people known to the victim.

These facts come from studies done at the University of Florida at Gainesville, St. Cloud State University in Minnesota, Kent State University in Ohio and the University of Rhode Island in Kingston. Making the assumption that K-State is comparable to these schools, that means during a four- to five-year span, 2,250 of the women on this campus will be victims of rape or attempted rape. That is equivalent to 10 incidents each week

The cause of the rapes at K-State and throughout the nation is a product of the rape culture we live in and lack of information on the subject. Psychologists and sociologists say the United States is living in a rape culture, because we are living under notions and norms set up during the first 75 years of this century.

We have been taught that men always hold the dominant role, and that both men and women are have specialized roles within marriages and careers. These notions are now in conflict with recent changes in the rights of women and their accepted roles within society.

The dissonance created with this conflict coupled with our society's obvious acceptance of violence has resulted in a culture that is experiencing an unspeakable number of rapes. Adding to the problem, I feel K-State is uninformed about the dangers of date rape.

Because other universities have not informed students of a known hazardous situation, they have been taken to court in third-party civil law suits. To avoid this potential controversy, K-State must develop a specific presentation within its freshman orientation programs.

This presentation could include a speaker from the Women's Resource Center, or one of the counseling centers on campus. In addition, a pamphlet on date rape which could be distributed with the orientation packet would be a great benefit to students.

Similar presentations made throughout the year to living groups would also be helpful in informing students that date rape does happen and that something can be done to reduce the number of attacks.

Henley's message goes to heartland

Ex-Eagles drummer Don Henley wrote a song for his latest album that tells of the decline and fall of the American farmer. In "Month of Sundays" Henley writes:

I used to work for (International) Harvester/I used to use my hands

I used to make the tractors and the combines/that plowed and harvested this

Now I see my handiwork on the block everywhere I turn

And I see the clouds cross the weathered faces and I watch the harvests burn

Only recently has the mainstream media paid attention to the plight of the farmer, and the farmers were in trouble long before it became news. Those with inside knowledge of the farm problem have provided me, a layman, with an overview of the problem.

Barry Flinchbaugh, professor of agricultural economics, said the boommarket days of the '70s led everyone to expect an extended period of profitability, and few people foresaw the decline of international markets, radical changes in economic policy and the degree of instability in farm businesses.

It seems high commodity prices in the midand late-'70s caused a frenzied expansion in agriculture that was ill-advised. The Carter administration's wheat embargo against the Soviet Union and the Reagan administration's alteration of the economy were not foreseen, and the farmer now is paying the price of poor forecasting.

RICH HARRIS Collegian Columnist

Some farmers are making ends meet, some are hurting. But the corporate farms, with thousands of acres and far greater economies of scale than independent farmers could ever hope for, are the only ones really making money.

Flinchbaugh said the '70s saw a huge increase in "inflationary paper equity." When Paul Volker took over as Federal Reserve Board chairman, he took steps to eliminate this, and farmers, whose land was their equity, saw an already debt-heavy economy slide ever deeper into hock.

Others I have spoken to said they view the farm problem along the same lines as Flinchbaugh. He said hope for the farmer won't come from simple solutions. "Only simpleminded people have simple solutions for complex problems," he said.

But he indicated some areas where immediate benefits could be obtained. Improving international marketing would be a help because part of the farm problem stems from excessive production, which could be remedied by selling surplus commodities overseas.

Another area Flinchbaugh cited was lowered production costs, such as fuel, seed, equipment and interest rates. A 1 percent decline in interest rates could save the farmers $2 billion dollars in interest charges. Finally, he said land values would have to change so that a positive cash flow was provided, making it profitable to farm the Clearly these are not the only answers to a complex problem, and far from the only questions. But those with a less-intimate grasp of the situation might find a little research to their advantage. No one doesn't like to eat.

1,000-piece art collection still has no home after 23 years

Staff Writer

In 1963, the KSU Foundation accepted the first cash gift to be used toward the construction of a campus art center.

More than 20 years and $311,000 later, the building exists only as a design project for fifth-year architecture students.

The University's 1,000-piece art collection, including works by Pablo Picasso, Henri Matisse and Salvador Dali, is spread about in the hallways and offices of almost every building on campus.

"Up until a few years ago, it's been a pretty well-kept secret that K-State had an art collection," said Jessica Reichman, University art curator.

Because there is no permanent display area, visitors can never fully appreciate the art which is "displayed, but not interpreted" in isolated areas across the campus, Reichman said.

Reichman and Charles Stroh, art department head, look forward optimistically to the arrival of incoming University President Jon Wefald, hoping he will carry out building plans begun more than two decades ago

"I certainly would support efforts to build an art center on campus," Wefald said in a recent phone interview. "I know that people are concerned about it, and it's probably long overdue.

"Until I get there and talk with people, I can't tell you what priority it would have."

President Duane Acker has been sympathetic to the art department's requests for a fund-raising campaign. However, he was faced with completing many other "very necessary projects" first, Stroh said.

An art center is "something I would have liked to have my name associated with," Acker said. It would probably have to be built entirely with private donations as state appropriations are unlikely for this type of project, he said.

the project, doing a feasibility study and organizing a major fund-raising campaign, Acker said.

'K-State has a tremendous art collection that many people don't know about. There probably is a need (for a permanent display area)," said Les Longberg, controller for the KSU Foundation.

However, Longberg said an art center "will not be built with $50 and $100 contributions. You've got to have several major gifts - half a million dollars or more."

Longberg said a 1979 survey of alumni showed there wouldn't be enough financial support to make the project feasible.

Tom Carlin, director of communications for the Foundation, also cited the survey and said, "Some alumni would give to an art museum, but we don't know enough to indicate that a campaign could be successful."

The survey, taken by Community

The steps toward building an art Service Bureau of Dallas, showed center are determining the need for 10.3 percent of interviewees supporting construction of an art center as compared to a 21.8 percent vote for additional scholarships and 21.4 percent for a new field house.

"The survey is absurd," Stroh said. The statistics are not only outdated, but based on interviews with "about 100 hand-picked, businessman-rancher-banker

The results were not based on a random sample of alumni. Most of the interviewees were white, male Kansas residents who would predictably rather build a field house on campus than an art museum, Stroh said.

"The business of saying the interest isn't out there is baloney, Stroh said. "There are enough people within a three-mile radius of this building (Art Building) who would give enough to build a museum.

The issue is whether the administration is willing to go out and ask those people for their money.

Enjoy smooth, creamy

There's a new president coming now. Reichman said. A new era is beginning. It's our turn to start rattling the cage."

The University art collection was intiated in 1929 with a focus on regional art. Lithographs by Grant Wood, watercolors and prints by Thomas Hart Benton and John Steuart Curry and oil paintings by Birger Sandzen represent some of the Midwest's finest art, Reichman said.

Students seem to respect, appreciate and enjoy the artworks, Reichman said. "Only a handful in the last 10 to 12 years have been stolen or vandalized.'

The real risk of displaying the collection in various buildings across campus is not the threat of deliberate destruction, but unintentional wear on paper and canvas caused by changes in humidity and temperature and exposure to fluorescent light.

Recently, a Benton opaque watercolor, titled "Meeting House," had to be professionally conserved,

The paper was badly buckled after years of being moved around in different environmental conditions. The painting was sent to Chicago to be dry-cleaned, flattened, newly matted and protected by filtering plexiglass, a shield against ultraviolet light. This process cost

Several possible sites for an art center have been studied including the east end of Memorial Stadium, the triangle of land behind McCain Auditorium and the band practice field, Reichman said.

All of these locations would meet the most important criteria for a museum site - visibility and accessibility to visitors

Renovating an old building is possible, but it would require the installation of complicated thermostat, lighting and security systems. In the end, a building constructed specifically for this purpose might be more feasible, Reichman said.

University receives art collection; donations include clock, paintings

By BOB OLSON Collegian Reporter

A large grandfather clock in K-State Union Bluemont Room is just one piece of a collection donated to the University by Charles Kincaid, a businessman from Independence.

The clock was restored to working order by David Seay, owner of The Regulator Time Co. in Manhattan. Apparently the clock is one of three in the United States, said Jessica Reichman, University art curator.

"Walt Smith, director of the Union, took a personal interest in getting the clock fixed. The timepiece had worked, but the calendar part had been broken for many years,' Reichman said.

"A clock like this is unique because of the calendar motion," Seay said. "It is actually a perpetual calendar. The mechanism of the calendar is connected to the clock by rods and linkages. It even accounts for leap year by adding a day.'

It took Seay six months to fix the

It was Kincaid's friendship with the late John Helm, professor of art, that prompted Kincaid to donate the family home, along with furnishings, artwork and a cash gift to the University upon his death in 1968, Reichman said.

The cash gift was originally $71,500. Les Longberg, KSU Foundation accountant, said the total value of the property, cash and accumulated interest is now $216,000.

Helm was the first curator of art for the University, but did it as a labor of love in addition to his responsibilities in the art department, Reichman said.

Kincaid attended the University of Kansas and later practiced law. In addition to being a businessman, he was business manager for the state from 1940 to 1946 and served on the people wanting to play it.

"The pieces in the Kincaid collection are unique in the fact that they are decorative art and furniture. Some of the most important paintings in our collection came from (the Kincaids)," Reichman said.

The art pieces are mostly oil paintings on display in various locations on campus. The pieces are rotated from place to place for the sake of variety, she said.

"It depends on the value of the piece (as to where it is displayed). If the piece is relatively valuable - if it's a small piece that could be easily stolen or damaged - I would rather keep it in a safer place," she said. # Ogallala irrigation water low

By ERIC RHODENBAUGH Staff Writer

The Ogallala aquifer sits like a giant sponge beneath the high plains. But man has squeezed the sponge too hard and it's feeling the pressure.

The Ogallala is the largest underground aquifer in the world. It once held 650 trillion gallons of fresh water which took nature millions of years to provide. In less than 50 years, man has depleted the aquifer to the point where irrigation is unfeasible in some areas.

"When they first started drilling wells in the Ogallala they were artesian - the water came up without even being pumped," said Richard Black, extension irrigation engineer, extension agricultural engineering. "People were getting water to the second floor of their homes, but it didn't take long for that

The water table may drop, even disappear in some areas, Black said, but the sponge will never be squeezed dry.

'The Ogallala will not be pumped dry, but it will get down to uneconomical pumping limits," Black said. "You have to have a yield of 100 to 200 gallons per minute to make irrigation economical. When yields get below that, they'll stop

The water level of the Ogallala experienced a "slight increase" this year, said Floyd Smith, director of the Kansas Water Resources Research Institute on campus.

"The main reason for the increase was a lot more rain this past year," Smith said. "Because of the large rainfall, farmers didn't have to use the Ogallala to irrigate.'

Smith said this increase was probably the first "in recent time." Black said irrigation in the Ogallala region began just before World War II and "took off like a shot" after the war.

"It was hard not to justify going into irrigation - inexpensive aluminum pipe and high-capacity irrigation equipment became available, fuel was cheap and there were good prices for agriculture products," he said.

There are currently 3.5 million acres under irrigation in Kansas, Black said. The state has 20 million acres which could be irrigated.

Orlan Buller, professor of agricultural economics, said total irrigated acreage dropped dramatically in the early 1980s, but depletion of the Ogallala was not the primary cause for the drop.

"Some places had water problems, but in most cases it was economic problems that slowed irrigation," Buller said. "It just cost too much to pump the water.

"The water table gets so deep below the surface that it costs too much to pump it out. In addition, corn and wheat prices were going down and fuel prices were going up,

Recent drops in oil prices won't have much effect on irrigators, Buller said, because irrigation costs are tied to gas and electricity costs. Black said the slowdown in irrigation would be gradual. "It's not paying enough to encourage any newcomers. Irrigation has just quit growing and it'll wind down slowly," he said.

Winding down slowly would do far less harm to local economies than would a sudden end to irrigation, Buller said.

"If you give communities 10 to 15 years to adjust, it won't be a drastic change and they'll be able to adjust. The economy as a whole won't look that much different," Buller said.

But the draining of the Ogallala will have an impact. The greatest impact will be on the irrigators themselves.

"Farmers are shifting from corn to crops that use less water, like wheat and grain sorghum," Buller said. "They are shifting to dryland

"In order for a farmer to become a dryland farmer, he must add 1,000 to 2,000 acres. Not all irrigation farmers can be viable dryland farmers - half of the irrigators won't make it," he said.

Dryland farming conjures up images of the dustbowl of the 1930s, Buller said. But with waterconservation practices such as minimum tillage and terracing, the area is "fairly productive with dryland farming. The loss of water from the Ogallala is a large factor in the reduction of stream flow in Western Kansas, Black said.

"Leakage from the Ogallala kept streams flowing in Western Kansas," Black said. "That's part of the reason the streams out there are going dry - the water levels in the Ogallala have been pulled down below stream level."

Stream flow and agriculture are experiencing changes due to the draining of the Ogallala, but cities and industries will not be as affected, Buller said.

"Cities can afford to go deeper than irrigators," Buller said. "I don't think the lower water table is jeopardizing urban areas. There may be shortages, but there will be water for cities and industries.'

Students will 'dig' for grades

By JILL LANG Collegian Reporter

Some K-State students will be "digging" for their grades this summer as they take part in an archaeological field study.

Along with University of Kansas students, students here will be able to take part in the six-week field study from June 9 through July 18. The cost to Kansas residents is $500. The money is used for food and supplies, as well as to pay tuition costs.

The six-hour credit course will involve spending seven hours a day doing the actual "digging" and approximately 45 minutes at the end of the day washing and caring for the artifacts. During the first half of the course, the evenings will entail attending a series of lectures delivered by Alfred Johnson, director of the Museum of Anthropology at the University of Kansas; and Patricia O'Brien, professor of anthropology at K-State.

Brad Logan, assistant professor at the University of Kansas, will serve as director for the actual field work.

Recruiting wars begin to calm for new 'Cat coaching staff

Dictating tempo key to Wildcats' success

By TIM FITZGERALD Assistant Sports Editor

When Lon Kruger returned to K-State as basketball coach, he and his assistants Dana Altman and Greg Grensing had only three weeks to recruit before the first-day players could sign letters of intent.

By then, most of the big men had committed to other schools and the Wildcat coaches were left scrambling in search of the best "athletes" they could find.

"We entered late in the recruiting season and not a lot of size was available at that time. We were in a position where we had to sign the best players available and we did that," Kruger said.

"We got basketball players that do what we want very well," Grensing said. "It's not the athlete's physical attributes which are important most of the great athletes tend to be a little smaller.'

So far, K-State has signed six players to become Wildcats. Grensing points out that only two of those players are what fans and the Simmons and Mark Dobbins and media would classify as forwards. guards Ty Walker and Lynn Smith. Those two are early signee 6-11 forward-center Howard Bonser and 6-7 junior college transfer Charles his returning talent — but he realizes Bledsoe of Moberly (Mo.) Community College.

The others include 6-5 all-American guard Mitch Richmond from Moberly, 6-1 high school product Steve Henson, 6-3 William Scott of State Fair (Mo.) Community College and 6-2 Michael McCraeven of Kaskaskia (Ill.) Community College. K-State may also be near to Kruger were in a similar situation signing 6-3 prepster Ivan Smith of Houston.

With the appeal of the NCAA decision on the 6-8 Norris Coleman still pending, K-State's only returning players over 6-foot-5 are 6-9 Ron Meyer and 6-7 Percy Eddie.

Meyer is recovering from a lateseason knee injury and despite his claims that he will be recovered by the start of next season, knees are sometimes slow to heel.

Besides Eddie, that would leave Kruger with 6-5 forwards Lance

The lack of height worries Kruger who is just finding time to review he'll have to do the best he can with what he has.

"I'm concerned about it. We're going to have to dictate the pace of the game at both ends of the floor. It is imparative we do that, because we have a lot of perimeter people,' Kruger said.

Grensing points out that he and while they coached at Pan American, but were able to overcome the height problems. Grensing believes that they and Altman will be able to handle the lack of size the way the Pan Am "Fighters and winners don't look at size and statistics - they look at ways to win ballgames," Grensing said. "That is the common denominator between all of the players we have recruited. They all come from winning programs.'

Junior college star gets away from K-State

By TIM FITZGERALD Assistant Sports Editor

Chris Blocker might be the one

K-State basketball coach Lon Kruger thought the Wildcats had a very good shot to sign the 6-4 all-American junior college star for the College of Southern Idaho, but Blocker signed with the University of Texas-El Paso last Wednesday.

"It was a very tough decision for Chris. He enjoyed his visit here, the players, the atmosphere and his talk with the academic people," Kruger said. "It was back and forth, we just didn't get the nod.

K-State had made it to the final three on the high-scoring guardforward's shopping list. North Carolina State also was included with K-State and UTEP in Blocker's final three.

Assistant coach Greg Grensing. who recruited Blocker, said he he feared that NC State would sign Blocker, but Grensing thought the indecision over Norris Coleman's

"UTEP did a good job. He (Blocker) went with the safe choice. (UTEP) is well established and with great fans," Grensing said.

Apparently UTEP made a late reappearance on Blocker's list of choices. After being in the race early, UTEP was replaced by Kentucky and Marquette, but UTEP was there at the end when it counted

"Blocker is a good player and good talent. Different schools come in and out - that is how recruiting goes," Kruger said.

Not only does K-State lose Blocker's talents, but by losing Blocker the Wildcats might have also missed out on having one of the finest backcourts in the nation next season.

Grensing points out that the scouting service K-State uses ranked previous Wildcat signee Mitch Richmond and Blocker as the top two junior college guard prospects in the eligibility might have scared Trenkle said the soft-spoken Blocker is a versatile performer.

"He is a great player," Trenkle said. "He's not a point guard, he's three players in one. Chris can play point, offguard or bang in the middle if necessary. He can lead the break, he can pull up, he can do it all." Blocker said when he was on the K-State campus over the weekend of April 26-27 that he wanted to play for a team that he could help, but not a program with a lot of problems.

"I wouldn't want to come into a total rebuilding situation. I want to go where I feel most comfortable and where I can affect the program the most," Blocker said.

Despite his decision to go elsewhere, Blocker believes that Kruger and his assistants Grensing and Dana Altman will rebuild the basketball program at K-State.

"They're going to do well," Blocker said. "It's already a quality program. They're going to make it that much more successful." K-State's Vikman gave it best shot

There are four classifications of shooters. Marksman, which is the lowest; sharpshooter; expert; and master, which is the highest.

These are the national championships whose name includes "International" because they are shot under the NRA international rifle rules, said Alan Arwine, rifle team coach. The match was open to anyone and Vikman said he started shooting in 1980, while he was a junior in high school, but did not shoot with an air rifle until last year.

Job of rebuilding seems to never end for K-State athletics

A familiar word for any K-State fan. It seems K-State sports (especially football) have been in a perpetual state of rebuilding for the longest time. In some cases, rebuilding isn't really an appropriate term. Some K-State sports have never built anything to be rebuilt. But nonetheless, rebuilding has been the theme of Wildcat athletics in the 1985-86 school year and will continue to be in the 1986-87 term as well. And it's a challenge, this rebuilding business, just ask Athletic Director Larry Travis. He'll probably tell you. Take a look at Travis. He has been on the job for a little over a year and already he is starting to show some wear from it.

Travis came to K-State with plenty of ideas and enthusiasm. As well he should. It's going to take plenty of these two elements to build a sucessful program.

In his time on the job, Travis is gradually finding out what the numerous athletic directors who preceded him in the last ten years learned during their stays.

Trying to get anything established at K-State is extremely difficult.

And next year looks like more of the same. The Wildcat football team will likely be picked for the Big Eight Conference cellar. The basketball team, a conference loser for four consecutive seasons, probably won't be picked much higher.

Excluding cross country and track and field, each of the minor sports are mired at the bottom of the Big Eight as well. Every continued. In fact, K-State hasn't won a Big Eight title of any kind since 1977. The tenyear anniversary is approaching. And now the annual question. How do we year in recent times, the downward cycle has turn this trend around? Some people believe bringing in a few new faces in the top positions can do the job. Well, if that's the answer, K-State should make a quick rise to the top. The longest tenures of any K-State coaches belong to second-year women's basketball Coach Matilda Mossman, baseball Coach Gary Vaught and women's tennis Coach Steve Bietau. Other than this, each and every Wildcat coach will be coaching his first or second K-State team next season.

So the rebuilding process continues. And aside from Wildcat football Coach Stan Parrish, who promised a winner next year and ought to be held to his word, K-State fans shouldn't feel right about expecting too much from these coaches and their teams next Solid athletic programs aren't built overnight. The Texases, Georgias and UCLAs of the college athletic world were built, they didn't just happen.

The next two or three years will determine whether K-State sports will ever amount to anything more than a lot of team losses and

"When I'm Richel I can just say I'm here. I become a sophisticated bitch. I just throw on clothes and think I'm so elegant. People look at me and say 'Wow.'"

Allan said he enjoys dressing as Richel to shatter others' preconceived ideas, such as when he went to Aggieville dressed as Richel last Halloween. "I was wearing a black lace teddy and I was really sleazy. That's pretty much all I wore. I had a little jacket, white lace hose and red pumps on. I was a tramp. I walked up and down the street. We were taking pictures of it because it was fun and different."

Student photographs life in America

Collegian Reporter

Photographing life in America in one day for a documentary book is a difficult task.

One way to overcome the difficulty is to hire 200 photojournalists and send them to record the daily activities in the United States as seen through the camera's viewfinder.

The project is "A Day in the Life of America," and K-State photojournalist Andy Nelson, junior in journalism and mass communications, was selected to be a part of the national photographic project.

"I was really thrilled to be asked to work on the project," Nelson said. "It gave me a chance to work on a project with some of the best photojournalists in the world."

The project was sponsored by companies including Kodak, Nikon, United Airlines and Hertz. The American project is the fifth of its type and will be published in October as a 250-page book with more than 350 color and black and white pictures. The other four books were "A Day in the Life of Japan," "A Day in the Life of Australia," "A Day in the Life of Canada," and "A Day in the Life of Hawaii.' Nelson was contacted about the project in the middle of April about two weeks before the May 2 shooting date - by former K-State photographer Jim Richardson, who is a special projects photographer for the Denver Post and a North Central Plains assignments editor of the project.

Nelson, who worked as an intern at the Post last summer, was asked by Richardson to work as an associate photographer on the project. This meant Nelson would not be paid as a staff photographer for his work but his travel expenses would be paid.

Nelson, who was familiar with the other "day in the life of ... " projects, said he gladly accepted the assignment to shoot in Iowa.

His first assignment was to photograph meditators at the Maharishi International University in Fairfield, Iowa.

For two hours twice a day 1,000 men and 1,000 women retreat to two separate 20,000-square foot domes for meditation. Nelson was allowed 20 minutes to shoot the photographs he needed to show the people meditating.

"Photographs inside of the dome were interesting because 1,000 men were sitting completely still in silence," Nelson said. "They only let me shoot for 20 minutes because they said after an hour the whole group levitates and they didn't want me to shoot that."

After completing the assignment at the university, Nelson traveled to Keokuk, Iowa, to cover two assignments.

The first of these was to shoot barges coming up the Mississippi River and to show how the lock and dams are used to get up the river.

His second assignment in Keokuk was to photograph the Keokuk Junction Railway, a 1.2 mile railroad which is one of the world's smallest.

"I think that working on this project allowed me to look at my strengths and weaknesses in photojournalism and deal with going into a totally unfamiliar situation and make good photographs," Nelson said.

"It was a once-in-a-lifetime experience and I would do it again in a heartbeat," he said.

Trains crash at depot; railroad inquiry begins

By The Associated Press

POVOA DE SANTA IRIA, Portugal - A passenger express traveling up to 70 mph smashed into the rear of a commuter train stopped at a suburban Lisbon station Monday, killing at least 14 people and injuring 83, officials said.

Gil Martins, head of rescue operations at the crash site 10 miles outside Lisbon, said the passenger run was bound from northern Portugal to the capital.

Portugal's state-owned railroad started an investigation. Carvalho Carreira, head of the Railroad Management Board, told reporters human error may have been the

The express train's engineer, who was not injured, told the Commission of Inquiry signals conflicted as he approached the station, the news agency Noticias de Portugal

"The first signal was green but the second was red," it quoted the driver as saying. He said he slammed on his emergency brakes when he saw the red light and fled to the rear of his locomotive before the crash, the agency reported.

"The express drove the other train more than 50 meters down the track, completely wrecking the rear carriage where most of the dead and injured were found," Martins said.

He said more bodies may be inside the crumpled wreckage.

Domestic news agencies quoted fire officials as saying the death toll could reach 18. Martins said one of the dead was a foreign woman but no further identification immediately available.

Planning office installs Kedzie wheelchair lift

By DAWN SZEPI Collegian Reporter

In order to provide handicapped accessibility to Kedzie Hall, the University Facilities Planning Office is installing a ramp and wheelchair

The difference between this accessibility project and others on campus is the installation of a glass wall around the area.

"We are using a glass wall instead of a mason wall because it is less expensive and more appropriate," said Vincent Cool, University architect and associate director of facilities planning.

The glass wall, he said, is appropriate because it weighs less than a mason wall.

While the glass is more fragile, it should not cause any injury, Cool said, because the glass will be both laminated and tempered.

"This way if it is broken (on the inside) the glass will hang together like the front windshield of a car," he Cool said the tempered outside glass will shatter if broken, "just as the back window of a car.'

Cool said railings will be placed around the wall to prevent people from walking through it.

"This is the major project this year," he said. "Each year we have a number of requests, but we are limited by funding.

Cool said several years ago the Kansas Legislature provided funds for accessibility projects, but those funds have not been available for several years. Funding for this project came from operating funds at the facilities planning office.

"There are several problem areas on campus and Kedzie is just one of them. With the number of requests we receive each year we have a committee to decide where the need is greatest," Cool said.

The modifications should be completed in about six weeks, he

Cool said a greenhouse is not being installed at Kedzie, but "We will leave it up to the journalism and mass communications students to decorate the new area to resemble

Sisters serve as interpreters, enable deaf students to 'hear'

By JEFF BIELSER Collegian Reporter

Interpreters are the ears for deaf students through a program offered by Services for Students with Physical Limitations.

Two of the interpreters are sisters, Natalie and Sherry Smith. Both are native signers, meaning they grew up with sign language because both of their parents are deaf.

"When you teach a child something, it is much easier for (the child) to learn" than when a person gets older, said Sherry, senior in speech education and pre-law.

Both had to learn to speak from learned from grandparents," Natalie said. They said people generally treated their situation with their parents with curiosity more than anything

"People always found me more interesting," Sherry said.

"Our parents always avoided being in any place where they couldn't communicate," Sherry said. She said that mainly meant her parents stayed away from large crowds of people, preferring to stay among smaller, more familiar groups of people.

They said some of their friends even tried to learn some sign language so they could converse with the parents as well.

Even though both women were native signers, when they began to interpret at K-State they had to acquaint themselves with Signing Exact English. Most native signers use American Sign Language.

The difference in the two forms is with SEE a person signs each word spoken and in ASL not every word is signed. "ASL is very conceptual," Natalie said.

"It's a language," Sherry said. An example they gave was a person would sign each word to communicate "I am going to take an airplane" in SEE, but in ASL the signs might only say "I take airplane." In ASL the concept is understood.

They said SEE is important in a college setting. They said in a college situation an interpreter has to be "Interpreters have to adjust to the student. They are the ears for the student," Sherry said.

"But if you get a fast talker you have to take shortcuts," she said. "It's important to be able to make up your own signs."

They said another reason it was important to improvise new signs is sign language hasn't kept pace with some of the new terminology in the classroom.

"I have vocabulary lists and names (for some of the more difficult courses) to familiarize myself with," said Natalie.

"I've been real lucky not to have been thrown into classes that are too technical," Sherry said.

While standing in front of a class, with their backs to the instructor, the interpreters also have to mouth the words for the student for whom they are interpreting. Note takers are also provided if needed, they said. Reactions from the classes are about the same, they said. "Students always stare at you for the first couple of weeks," Sherry said. She said after that the interpreter becomes a part of the class, so much so, sometimes the students expect the interpreter to do the same work they have to do.

Natalie said she had one instructor ask her if she wanted to take a test along with the other students.

Both said they were glad for the experience because it has been an education for them.

"The relationship between me and the student is I'm learning as well as the student," Natalie said.

"Being an interpreter sends me in a lot of directions, and I get to meet other professors," Sherry said.

He said he isn't sure how he learned to hold a teacup with the correct poise, or to promenade in women's high heels - as far as he knows it "just came naturally." Allan said he hasn't ever practiced female mannerisms, except when he was preparing for a female impersonation show he did in a Topeka club.

"There is an elegance about her. I don't know where she learned it," he said, "maybe from the movies."

For a female impersonator, learning how to make "boobs from birdseed and panty hose" comes as naturally as applying makeup for teen-age girls. It's "just one of those things you learn." But some women find themselves looking at Richel and asking "why can't I look that

He learned to put on makeup by following instructions on the back of a package, experimentation and from other female impersonators. He started fashioning his hair after a high school play where he portrayed a clown and "looked like Bozo," he

While physical changes are brought about by the application of eye liner and hairspray, the total transition to Richel is a mental

"My attitude changes when I'm Richel," he said. "I have to change from masculine to feminine. It's just a feeling I get when I get dressed up - just like when I put on a coat and tie - you depict the mood.

"It's a lot of work mentally to put off that attitude of sophistication and not fall in the trap of being fake," he

The physical change from Allan to Richel takes longer than the attitude change. He said on a good day it can take more than three hours to bathe, shave and put on makeup. And yes, he admits he gets a few stares when

"I don't get too nervous when I go into a store to buy a pair of shoes or lingerie. My money is the same as everyone else's and I'd like to get the same respect, but I don't always get

Allan said he dresses as Richel "only occasionally." He began dressing as a woman almost four years ago when, by his own admission, he looked like a "tacky drag queen."

"The first time...it was some punk rock party and everybody just thought I was pretty weird. One guy came up to me and thought I was a lesbian dressed up really weird for Halloween.'

Allan said he isn't sure when his penchant for women's clothing

"When I was growing up I didn't like to play war - I wanted to play Barbies. I like cheerleading, but I also was in Boy Scouts and Cub Scouts. It's just looking back now I see it. I didn't realize it at the time."

He said his mother knows he's gay. but neither of his parents knows about his interest in women's

While his interests may differ from the social norm, Allan said he doesn't want to be a woman.

"A lot of people wonder if I would rather be a woman, or have a sex change, but I don't. I like who I am. Richel is a part of me. It's not that I have a split personality - I know what I'm doing.

"Now because of surgery I could change and become a woman, but I'm not going to because I'm happy as a man. Sure I dress up as a woman, but actors dress up.'

Not everyone has a favorable opinion of Allan and his escapades as Richel. As a homosexual, Allan has found his gay friends pulling away

Planning board denies land rezoning request

By The Collegian Staff

The Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board denied a request for a rezoning from R, single-family residential district to a four-family residential district at its meeting Monday night.

The rezoning was requested by De-Wayne Talley, 3000 Creighton Terrace. The tract of land is located east of University Terrace and west of University Drive.

Approximately 20-25 persons attended the meeting to oppose the request. John Strickler, 1523 University Drive, said "I object to the development because it would change the character of the neighborhood.'

'We do not want to add to the existing problem or cause new problems," Talley said.

The second public hearing ended in approval of a rezoning of two tracts of land from R-3, multiple-family district to R-2, two-family residential district. The R-2 use limits construction to duplexes and single-family

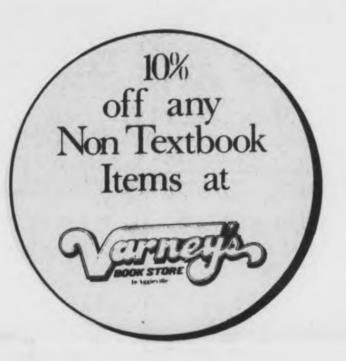

The first rezoning consists of 31/2 blocks, with the borders being North Sixth Street on the west, North Fifth Street on the east, the alley north of Bluemont Avenue on the north and Fremont Street to the south. The second area is bordered by Claflin Road on the north, Tenth Street on the east and Manhattan Avenue on the west. The southern, jagged border runs along Kearney, Thurston and Bertrand streets. Dean Zollman, 1000 Thurston St. said, "The change in zoning does reflect the way the neighborhood is now (and) does not change it."

In other action, the board approved an amendment to allow golf courses as a conditional use in the G-1, agricultural districts. This request will allow construction of additional buildings at the Stagg Hill Golf Course, southwest of the city.

College graduation — a time for decision making.

Upon graduation, some students majoring in agriculture could be faced with two job opportunities. The first choice is to start farming or return to the family farm. The second choice could be the chance for a position in agribusiness, for example, dealing in commodities, livestock buying or grain marketing. A number of graduates are opting for the second choice - an agribusiness career. "In the past, most of the graduates have been going into agribusiness, but we've also seen more going back to the farm in the past couple of years," said John Riley, assistant director of agriculture resident Dennis Cashier, senior in agricultural economics, has accepted a position with The Federal Land Banks of Wichita.

"I'll start out being on the payroll and my dad will give me the responsibility of part of the farm, for example the hogs," he said.

"I decided to go back (to the farm) because I'm the last of six kids and I wanted to farm - I enjoy it," Ericson said. "I didn't want to go to college, but I Ericson is looking forward to getting back and getting started, but he's scared because of the farm economic situation. He believes farming is the occupation he wants to pursue.

'You've got to be excited about your job or you might as well forget it," he said.

At graduation time, hotels in Manhattan begin to fill fast. However, some parents of graduating seniors will not have to search for a place to stay during graduation. The Department of Housing will be making housing facilities in the residence halls available to parents of students currently living in the halls.

Robert Felde, assistant director of the housing department, said rooms are being provided for parents of graduating students who live in the residence halls.

"We gave some available guest housing space to parents of residence hall students. Empty space corridors in Haymaker and Ford (halls) will be available. Each guestroom is equipped with full service, such as pillows, blankets and other ac-

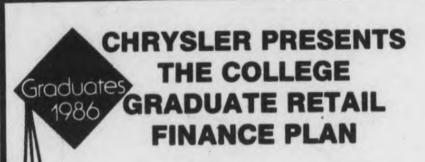

"Ten to 15 sets of parents will be using the guest housing, and the cost varies from $9 to $10, depending upon if it's a single or double room," he said.

Felde said one of the reasons there are only 10 to 15 sets of parents using the guestrooms is because the housing department did not advertise the service

"We didn't go out of our way to advertise. Basically students came to us asking us for help in finding a place for their parents to stay during graduation," Felde said.

Felde said this service is similar to an extension of the guest conference facilities which are available at K-State. He also said the housing department plans to expand its guest housing service by next year.

"Moore Hall will be used next year with a couple of its floors available for guest housing. It will be a pretty nice operation for conferences and guests of the University,

One hundred percent Colombian - coffee, that is — the key to achievement during finals week.

With graduation just a little more than a week away and finals starting Friday, students should be aware of the effects of caffeine and other "keep awake products."

Caffeine, in soft drinks, coffee, tea or other sources, is often thought of as an essential ingredient in cramming successfully for a climax to the semester's endeavors. At this time of year, caffeine intake is usually at its peak, said Cindy Culver-Burke, health educator for Lafene Student Health Center.

through finals week and is not recommended, Culver-Burke said. Healthier techniques can be applied instead of caffeine use.

"Relaxation techniques, such as deepbreathing exercises, help keep you awake," she said. Culver-Burke said it is important to get up and walk around every hour to divert attention for a few minutes.

"You should reward yourself," she said, "so you don't begin to feel more pressure." She suggested going to a recreation center for an hour or taking a brisk walk.

After a stressful time, such as finals, the body will rebel and will require more sleep and an increase in line Culver-Burke said the main remedy for last-minute cramming would be to prepare ahead of time.

Although healthier means to achieve energy exist, many students still depend on large amounts of caffeine.

On the average, an typical adult must consume 150 to 250 milligrams of caffeine in order to feel the effects. This is equal to about one or two cups of coffee, according to Food and Drug Administration statistics.

Though now in many products, caffeine first appeared in the form of coffee.

The coffee bean is a natural source of caffeine. Other substances containing caffeine include soft drinks, tea, chocolate and nonprescription drugs.

This common problem, known as insomnia, is especially prevalent during the high stress time of approaching finals, said David Danskin, psychologist at the counseling center in Holton Hall.

One of the most important things to do to alleviate insomnia is to "continue to go to bed at your regular time and get out of bed at the same time each day," Danskin said. Danskin has written an article on insomnia titled "Insomnia: What You Can Do To

'The only problem with students is that you don't (always) have that much flexibilty," Danskin said.

He said students should keep a paper and pencil "handy" in case there is something they want to remember which is keeping them awake.

"Some people find that a gentle stretching routine for several minutes just before getting into bed helps induce sleep; others practice relaxation techniques,' Danskin said.

He said several other things to remember for better sleep are to avoid eating heavy meals at night, sleep in a cool room, keep humidity higher than normal in the room, keep the noise level down and avoid taking naps during the day. Danskin also said that "the role of exercise cannot be stressed enough. Adding regular exercise has helped many people sleep better."

There are many things that can add to the problem of insomnia, he said, and it is determined by such things as "exercise, genes and how much you eat and weigh."

Danskin's article is available in Holton Hall to anyone who suffers from insomnia.

Job hunters face usual battle

1986 job hunt shows changes from previous recruitment pattern

By KEVIN KNAUS Collegian Reporter

The job search this year is comparable to the one last year, said Bruce Laughlin, director of the Career Planning and Place ment Center in Holtz Hall.

"We conducted approximately 4,400 interviews on campus this semester compared to about 5,000 each of the past three semesters," Laughlin said.

Laughlin said this semester there were more than 200 companies' representatives who visited campus to participate in the interviewing process.

"There were approximately 400 recruiters on campus this semester from the 200 companies," he said. Laughlin said in the past most recruiting was done during the spring semester. However, the fall semester recently has had an increase in recruiting action.

"Recruiting in the fall allows the company time to evaluate the interview and to set up plant or office trips," Laughlin said.

Approximately 1,500 students registered in the Career Planning and Placement Center to participate in the on-campus interviews. This figure does not include the few hundred alumni and re-registrations which were received this semester.

"We normally have 40 percent to 50 percent of the degree candidates register in the center," Laughlin said.

He said that of the people who register in the center for on-campus interviews, 20 percent to 25 percent will receive jobs.

'The number of job offers varies due to the demand in the major. In a high demand field 80 percent to 90 percent of the people may receive job offers," he said

Laughlin said some companies have reduced on-campus interviewing because of the economy or because they need fewer personnel than in the past.

Laughlin said students should remember that the interviewing on campus is just the tip of the iceberg.

Basic employment decisions are not made by the recruiters. The decision is made by someone down the road," Laughlin said.

He said the job offers this year are comparable to last year even though there have been some mixed signals.

"Salary offers seem to be up slighty but in many cases fewer offers are being made," he said.

There is a strong interest among students to remain in the state when looking for jobs, he said. He also said that Kansas City is the most popular city when students are selecting an area in which to work.

"Outside of the state there remains a strong popularity for the Sunbelt. California is making a comeback. It used to have a bad image but that is changing and its popularity continues to grow," Laughlin

Career planning, placement offers graduates help in search

By DAN SMITH Collegian Reporter

To some students graduation is a time for celebrating, a time of excitement about the new job offer and preparation for the "real world."

For other graduating seniors, it's a time of deep depression and worry over what they're going to do with their lives.

At the Career Planning and Placement Center, students can learn interviewing skills, resume preparation skills, make employer contacts and interview with companies on campus.

'About 50 percent of those who register with us end up getting jobs.'

— Bruce Laughlin

"We want to make students aware that we are here," said Bruce Laughlin, director for the career center. "I believe students should use all the services that are available to them here at K-State because they pay so much for tuition costs.

"About 50 percent of those who register with us end up getting jobs," Laughlin said. "A high percentage of these are in such fields as engineering, business administration, accounting and computer science.

"A big part of whether or not they have interviews on campus depends on their own Monday through Friday in Holtz Hall.

self-discipline," Laughlin said.

The best time for students to register at the center is early September. This is true for May and August graduates as well as December graduates. Registration should take place within one calendar year prior to receipt of degree, he said.

Although the career center helps students find jobs, Laughlin said he believes most students will be seeking employment when they leave campus, rather than having a job waiting for them when they graduate.

"We have found that the top paying jobs are in fields like electrical engineering, accounting, marketing and computer science," he said. "That's not to say that other fields don't pay as well though.

Laughlin said he wants to make students aware that the companies who come to campus are not typical ones

"These companies are well-known - the Fortune 500 types," he said. "Students should be aware that there are opportunities with smaller firms that pay just as

The busiest times for recruiting are October, November, February and March.

Lauglin said he wants to remind students that the interview workshop is a great preparation program which schedules staged interviews, panel presentations and question-and-answer sessions featuring employers throughout the job market.

The career center is open 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

There won't be just one student graduating from K-State this May in the Buyle household. Kathleen Buyle and her daughter, Suzanne, will be accepting their diplomas together.

Kathleen, senior in speech pathology and mother of six, has been attending classes for six years.

"I started in the fall of 1980 and I gradually increased until I was a full-time student in '83," Kathleen said.

She said that, at first, she really didn't know whether she was happy to be graduating with her daughter.

"I really didn't want to take the excitement away from her. It really is a special day," Kathleen said.

However, Suzanne, senior in secondary education, said she is excited to share the day with her mother.

"She (Kathleen) was kind of apprehensive about telling me. She thought I wanted to spend the day all to myself, but I really think it's great we're graduating together.

She really is amazing," Suzanne said.

Suzanne said that she admires her mom for finding time to go to school along with all her other activities. "My mom is involved in so many things. She coordinates CCD (religious education classes) at Seven Dolors Church, and she is also real involved in the Altar Society. On top of that, and besides classes, she has to find time to cook and clean," Suzanne said. Kennith, husband to Kathleen and father of Suzanne, said he's going to be able to make it to both commencement ceremonies. "The family will be able to watch Kathleen receive her diploma and then we will rush to see Susie get hers," he said.

Kennith said besides his daughter and wife graduating, he also has a daughter-inlaw graduating from Emporia State University that same day.

After graduation, Kathleen will return to K-State to pursue a master's degree. Suzanne plans to look for a position in secondary education with an emphasis in

Techniques allow relief from stress

By KIM KINSLOW Collegian Reporter

Graduation Special

When life's little things add up to bring a person down, measures can be taken to alleviate the stress, said David Danskin, professor at the Center for Student Development.

Danskin teaches stress management and said. relaxation techniques to students who need help with study skills.

Stress results from the body's response to daily events that upset people, Danskin

"Most of the stress problems are reactions from everyday activities; each thing causes a little stress," Danskin said.

The average student faces about 150 to 200 stressful events each day. These activities add up to produce a stressful reaction, he said.

Combating this stress takes a small amount of time each day. There are two forms of relaxation techniques: "quick" techniques and "deeper" techniques which take about 20 minutes a day.

Some of the quick techniques can be done while walking to class or waiting for a test to be handed out. One such technique is to take a deep breath, relax the jaw and let the shoulders droop. Danskin said when people are stressed, they tense up, breathe shallower, grit their teeth or tense their shoulders.

"If you see a person with a hard look on their face, they are probably stressed," Danskin said.

Another quick technique is to tense the body for five seconds, then let it relax. Danskin said the key to this technique is to feel the muscles release.

Rolling the head is another relaxation technique. It is also helpful to close the eyes and breathe in to the count of four, then breathe out to the count of four, Danskin does wonders for relieving stress.

If that doesn't work, Danskin said a smile cise

The deeper techniques need to be done every day for about 20 minutes. These include sitting and relaxing every part of the body except one, such as a hand. This one exception remains tense. After tensing up, relax that part of the body. The release, again, is the most important part, Danskin

A person can repeat commands to the body and then imagine them occurring to alleviate stress. An example of this is to say "warm your feet" and try to imagine it happening.

One can also imagine a place he enjoys going to, or can even go to that place, he

One of the last techniques a person can use is to imagine breathing away the tension. The object is to take the tension away from the tense part of the body and imagine it going into the lungs. Once it is imagined there, he said a person simply breathes it Danskin said both techniques, the quick and the deep, must be practiced to be effective. He said the deep techniques reinforce the quick ones but not all the techniques will work for everybody.

Problems are encountered in learning to deal with stress without involving the body, Danskin said. When the body does get involved, tension and migraine headaches develop, or a person's immunity to disease decreases, he said.

Danskin said students have the false idea people have to "psyche themselves up" to get things done. Evidence has shown that people perform better when they relax instead of getting excited, he said.

"A calm mind and alert body," Danskin said, is ideal for coping with stress.

Students must learn new habits, he said, along with eating right, waking up at the same time each morning and regular exer-

Grad school offers enrollment attractions

By TERESA TEMME Collegian Reporter

Quality attracts graduate students and contributes to the strong enrollment at K-State, said John P. Noonan, associate dean of the Graduate School.

"The enrollment may even be a little up," Noonan said, although there has been no significant change recently in enrollment in the school, which is 3,041.

Noonan said one reason graduate enrollment remains stable is that technology required for today's jobs is more sophisticated and students spend more time in school to prepare themselves.

"This is known as the 'knowledge explosion," Noonan said.

This trend will continue unless universities become technical schools, he said. "But I'm a believer in students becoming educated human beings instead of techni-

Students who receive undergraduate degrees at K-State and continue in graduate work have many reasons for remaining here, Noonan said.

tammarny with the faculty and being able to start their studies during their senior year of undergraduate work are a few of the reasons Noonan cited.

George Heid, senior in agricultural economics, said he will be pursuing graduate studies in education at K-State because a good program is offered.

"I like the people here, and I couldn't benefit any more from a different school,"

Another student, who asked to remain anonymous but who is a senior in sociology, said she planned to attend law school, but felt she needed more time to consider her future plans. Although she has not ruled out law school, she plans to attend graduate school here and study public administration which will "give her time to think."

Noonan said there were also disadvantages to staying at the same school for graduate studies. Because a student's experience is narrowed with one school, sometimes the student is encouraged to gain another perspective at a different school, he said.

Noonan added, however, that in many cases K-State offers some of the best Convenience, excellent -programs, graduate programs in the sountry ....

Student can overcome fears, find help with The Job Path

> By ANGELA O'HARA Collegian Reporter

With an emphasis on building confidence, Peggy Null-Stevenson, instructor of speech, has begun a service to help people get on track: The Job Path.

Null-Stevenson has been teaching employment interview classes at the University for eight years. She said The Job Path is the alternative for students who have not been able to take the class or who need specialized training.

"A lot of people are terrified (of interviewing)," Null-Stevenson said. "Fear is the greatest paralyzer."

Six months ago, Null-Stevenson began offering the service to help people overcome their fears and find the right job.

"The question you must initially answer is 'what is the job for me?' not 'what is a job?" Null-Stevenson said. "That is absolutely essential."

Once a student has answered that question, the job-finding process becomes much easier, she said.

Null-Stevenson said The Job Path is an individualized confidence boost. Her goal is to prepare her clients for almost any situation, she said.

"I want to polish you in marketing yourself. Enough people are constantly telling you what's not right with you. I simply tell you what is.'

Null-Stevenson said she began the business because she recognized she had "a most unique gift" - she can see the talent in others almost from the moment she meets them.

She said earlier this semester she was "stopped by a cleaning woman who had stood outside my (employment interviews) class every day. She would stand outside and listen. She asked me if I would help

She said all the woman needed was some confidence in her ability.

In her eight years of teaching the class, Null-Stevenson said she has recognized the No. 1 fear among her beginning students: the interview itself. However, she said, most students need just as much training in resume and cover letter writing.

"What we do is similar to what I teach in my employment interviews class, but more practical and pragmatic," Null-Stevenson said. "It only takes about two hours of concentrated effort.' Since she started the business she said her clients have included businessmen in Manhattan and students from Salina. She said she hopes more K-State students take advantage of the opportunity.

She said her service is different from what students find on campus.

"I'm not a career planning and placement center...and I'm not in competition with the University.

"I do private consulting work," she said. "It's like very exclusive tutoring. "The little extras count, too," Null-Stevenson said.

it seems as if one must have credit to get it. "I think it's important that individuals establish credit fairly early because you'll come into situations where you'll need to borrow against your income," said Elizabeth Davis, assistant professor of human development and family studies.

By DARREN MCCHESNEY

Collegian Reporter

Davis teaches Personal and Family Finance, a three-hour course which instructs students how to shop for credit, build a good credit history and keep track of personal finances.

"...establish credit fairly early...'

- Elizabeth Davis

Davis requires students to keep a monthly total of all expenditures. This assists students in comprehending areas in which they are overspending.

"For example, one student had no idea she spent so much money on Cokes at the Union," Davis said.

"I don't know if there's a best way to prepare a budget," she said. "Take out your checkbook, look at past receipts, and see what you're likely to spend in the future.

"Keep in mind some expenses will vary over the course of the year," Davis said. She also said to figure a budget with regards to inflation.

Davis suggests that students who want to Society thrives on credit. But sometimes build a good credit history while in college pay their rent and utility bills promptly.

'If you can't pay a bill when it's due, get in touch with the person to whom it is due, preferably in writing. Explain the provisions by which you are going to make it up," Davis said.

Another way to build a credit history is to apply for department store charge card, Davis said.

However, she also warned against credit

'It can be a good idea if you can handle it, but I've seen too many people charge up more than they could afford," she said.

Several department stores in Manhattan offer charge accounts, including Sears, Roebuck & Co.; J.C. Penney Co., Inc.; and Browne's Ladies and Children's store.

"If you have occassion to have a credit card, try to be sure if not paid in full every month, that you pay at least the minimum balance due," Davis said.

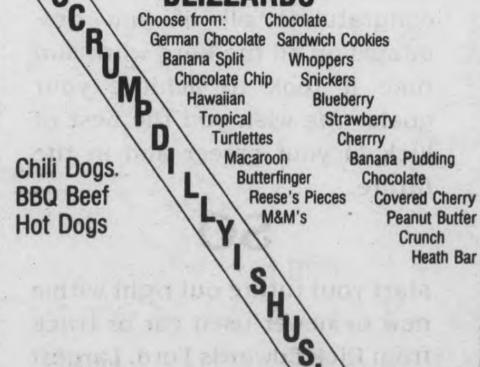

There are two things to remember about credit cards, she said.

"First, you are borrowing against your future income, and second, you must pay additional premiums in the form of interest in that account," she said.

If denied credit, go to the local credit bureau and ask to see your file, Davis said. "It is a law to be able to see your own file," she said.

Duane Acker will step down as University president June 30 to become director of food and agriculture for the U.S. Agency for International Development. Acker said the success of the coliseum fund-raising drive was one of his administration's biggest accomplishments.

Acker lists goals, achievements

By DAVID SVOBODA Editor

With his departure from K-State set to take place over the summer, Duane Acker has had several chances recently to reflect on his tenure as University president - a tenure which began in 1975 when he replaced James McCain, who had served as University president for 25 years.

When he took office, Acker had several goals. Eleven years later, some of those goals have been met and others remain yet unfulfilled. But as Acker would be the first to say, he is happy with what he has been able to accomplish during his administration.

'We feel very proud of some of the things that we have accomplished, and there are some things that we haven't done," had gotten them all done, it could be said that our aspirations weren't high enough in the beginn-

Acker's first goal on becoming President was to become a part of the operating structure of the University. With the large number of faculty and staff members retained from the McCain administration, the task was tough,

Acker said. But not insurmountable and certainly not worth making major changes to overcome.

"I came into the job recognizing that most of the administrative directors had been on board in Acker said. "I suppose that if we their jobs for a long, long time. I felt that a massive change in leadership would not be good for the University at that time," he

TOKYO - President Reagan hailed the 12th annual summit of industrial democracies as a "triumph in Tokyo," saying the meetings produced a "strong measure of allied unity" on economic, agricultural and anti-terrorism issues. "All that we sought at the summit was achieved," he said Wednesday.

Leaders of the seven summit nations wrapped up their meetings Tuesday, voicing satisfaction that they confronted terrorism while moving toward new trade talks and a revamped world monetary policy two principal goals of the economic conference.

Reagan, who was returning to Washington later Wednesday, said he was particularly pleased with the allies' united front on terrorism and said no nation should have to act alone against terrorists.

Reagan refused to divulge whether any specific counter-terrorist steps had been discussed by him and his summit partners, but said that even if they had, it would have been inappropriate to list them in the communique on terrorism.

His news conference, at 10 a.m. Tokyo time, was broadcast live to a Wednesday night American audience, 13 time zones behind.

Although the United States, Britain, Canada, France, Japan, Italy and West Germany failed to come to grips with the divisive and volatile issue of farm export subsidies, they did agree to a host of other initiatives, including coordinated efforts to improve nuclear safety in the wake of the Chernobyl reactor accident in the Soviet Union.

But for world leaders newly committed to fighting terrorism, the summit closed on the same raucous note that marred its opening: Japanese radicals seeking to sabotage the proceedings descended on subway and train stations with smoke bombs packed with firecrackers, crippling rush-hour traffic, but claiming no casualties, in a city turning weary under a welter of unprecedented security.

Staff delays plant evacuation

By The Associated Press

MOSCOW - A chemical explosion probably caused the Chernobyl nuclear disaster, and evacuation was delayed 36 hours because the plant staff did not realize how serious the accident was, Soviet officials said

They brushed off Western complaints about slow reporting of limited information on the April 26 accident at the Ukrainian plant, which spewed an invisible cloud of radiation over Europe.

None of the officials said whether the fire has been extinguished in the graphite reactor core. A report in the Communist Party daily Pravda earlier Tuesday suggested it was still burning or smoldering.

The six men, including the top nuclear energy official and the head of a government investigation, spoke at the first official news conference on the disaster.

Little new information was offered at the session, which was carefully controlled, beyond the probable cause and the revelation about delayed evacuation. They answered a half-dozen written questions, giving conflicting data on radiation emitted at the plant. The only four oral queries accepted were from Soviet reporters and journalists from other communist countries.

The cloud of radioactivity still hung over Europe on Tuesday and radiation was detected in the western United States, Canada and Japan. China said its monitors had found nothing abnormal.

None of the radiation was described as life-threatening, but many precautions still are in effect. Greece and several other governments continue warning their people against consuming fresh milk or leafy vegetables.

In Bonn, West German Interior Ministry sources said Soviet officials had asked to buy or rent remotecontrolled earth-moving machines for use in cleanup work at the Chernobyl plant 80 miles north of Kiev, a city of 2.4 million people that is capital of the Ukraine.

One official at the Moscow news conference insisted that the International Atomic Energy Agency was told of the accident three days before the agency said it got the report.

Soviet authorities publicly acknowledged the accident two days after it happened, following reports of abnormally high radiation levels in Scandinavia.

According to figures given at the news conference, 204 people were hospitalized, a slight increase from previous official reports of 197. The government said last week that two people were killed and 49 of those hospitalized had been discharged.

Ugandan diplomat blames interference for African crisis

By VICKI REYNOLDS Campus Editor

In order for the African people to "take care of their own destiny," the assumption by Americans that they must actively intervene on the behalf of Africans must be overcome, said James Ekwaro, Ugandan diplomat in political science and former executive secretary of All Africa Council of Churches.

Ekwaro and Mikel Johnson, northern field secretary of the American Friends Service Committee, spoke on campus Tuesday as part of the Africa Peace Tour in the United States. Their visit was sponsored by Coalition for Human Rights.

Ekwaro focused on the militarization of Africa and the intervention there by the East and West superpowers.

Ekwaro also presented details about the basic division between the privileged and underprivileged in Africa and their internal alliances.

"Class division is increasing and has been there in many societies for quite some time. It's nothing new," he said. "There are some people who say there is no division. I'm here to say this notion is a false notion. There are ruling classes that promote and perpetuate themselves."

Within these divisions, the resistance to oppressive governments also takes different forms, Ekwaro said.

"In Uganda, we resisted Idi Amin in many different ways," he said. "Peasants withdrew from production of the land. It was a passive resistance, but still resistance. The elites led the resistance.'

Ekwaro said that although Africa has been predominantly Western dominated for four centuries, today it is up for redivision among the superpowers.

"To a certain extent, this division between East and West is manipulated by the elites," he said, who are being subordinate in their relationships with the superpowers.

Between the two superpowers, which are both merchants of death because they sell military weapons, the Soviet Union is probably more qualified to handle the military aspect. The United States is strong economically," he said.

The African response to this division, Ekwaro said, is to say "wait, it's a division between the north and south as a whole, not the East and West, which is important."

It is this contention between the cliques and the superpowers which has caused the huge militarization of Africa today, he said.

Ekwaro said it is not just a matter of the elite versus the peasant; within the ruling class there are several divisions and varying alliances and hopes.

Ekwaro said there are also wars between nationalities today in Africa, especially in Ethiopia, which are a response to colonial-inherited impressions of nationalities.

About 1:30 a.m. on April 26, a 13-year-old girl ran through the studios of Seaton Hall to find someone to call the police.

She and two friends were looking down into the University underground tunnel system, when one of her friends fell.

Donald Ebert, 19-year-old resident of Manhattan, fell from the top of the tunnel entrance in the basement of Seaton to the concrete bottom which is more than 18 feet below.

The girl found two architecture students to assist Ebert. One phoned

The St. Mary Hospital and police and the other went to the tunnel entrance.

"He'd only been down there five or 10 minutes when I got there," said Mike Smith, junior in architecture. "He was leaning against the wall, fighting to stay awake, and sweating.

An ambulance arrived, but rescuers were unsuccessful in removing Ebert from the tunnel. The fire department was then called in to Freshnock said it took four firemen and four students to pull up the cage from the bottom of the tunnel. It was a process that took more than two hours, Smith said.

Ebert said he and two friends, the 13-year-old girl and a 17-year-old boy, were walking around on the second floor of Seaton when the 17-year-old started talking to two people whom Ebert thought were University students. "I was looking at the pictures on the walls while they were talking to the other kid who was with me,"

Ebert said. "He came over and asked me if I wanted to go see the steam pipe room - the tunnels - with these other two."

Ebert said he agreed because he was "curious."

He, the two juveniles and the two alleged University students went to the basement of Seaton.

Body in Libya may be U.S. pilot's

LONDON - Libyan television showed a film Tuesday night of a corpse in a military uniform and said it might be the body of a U.S. Air Force captain whose jet was shot down during the April 15 bombing raid.

Last Saturday, the state-run television showed pictures of a pilot's helmet with the name Lorence and the date 28 March on it, and said it washed ashore two days earlier near al-Zawiyah.

Pentagon spokesmen identified the two crewmen of the missing jet as the pilot, Capt. Fernando L. Ribas-Dominicci, 33, of Utuado in central Puerto Rico, and Capt. Paul L. Lorence, 31, of San Francisco, the weapons system officer.

Police arrest suspects in bombing

BERLIN - Police said Tuesday they have arrested two Jordanianborn men suspected in last month's fatal bombing of a West Berlin discotheque frequented by U.S. soldiers.

Police have arrested Farouk Salameh, 39, and Fayez Sahawneh, 34, both natives of Jordan, said Manfred Ganschow, who heads the West Berlin police team investigating the La Belle disco bombing.

The April 5 explosion at the La Belle discotheque killed a U.S. soldier and a Turkish woman and injured 230 people, 63 of them Americans. The Reagan administration contends Libya was behind the attack and U.S. forces retaliated by bombing two Libyan cities April 15.

WASHINGTON - The Senate Finance Committee, struggling toward a final vote on the biggest tax-overhaul bill in more than 30 years, voted Tuesday to repeal the deductions allowed for state and local sales taxes and most Individual Retirement Accounts.

Senators ease gun control limits

WASHINGTON - The Senate gave final congressional approval Tuesday night to legislation that would ease many restrictions of the 1968 Gun Control Act but maintain an 18-year-old ban on interstate sales of handguns.

The Senate passage by voice vote sent the bill to the president. Before the vote, supporters of the gun lobby and handgun control advocates worked out an agreement that later will modify some language in the gun bill. The key change would impose new restrictions on transportation of weapons across state lines.

Sen. James McClure. R-Idaho, chief Senate sponsor of the gun bill, said "there is no doubt" that President Reagan will sign the legisla-

The legislation culminates an 18-year effort by the National Rifle Association and allied groups to change the gun law, which was enacted after the assassinations of Sen. Robert F. Kennedy and civil rights leader Martin Luther King Jr.

The NRA said the bill was too restrictive for gun dealers and millions of law-abiding owners of firearms.

Preventative practices decreases the risk of contracting acquired immune deficiency syndrome, a Virginia health official said Tuesday night.

"AIDS is in fact a very difficult disease to get," Richard Keeling, director of student health at the University of Virginia in Charlottesville and chairman of America College Health Assistant Task Force on AIDS, said during the first part of a colloquium for residence hall staff.

"What is more dangerous is the hysteria that has been caused," he said. "As long as you don't have sex with someone with AIDS no other physical contact will give you AIDS."

Keeling said people have become somewhat paranoid about contacting AIDS and the media has been a large part of this problem.

"You cannot get AIDS from coughing, kissing, eating foods that were handled by people with AIDS, living in the same house or caring for people with AIDS."

The transfer of contaminated blood, organ transplants, sharing needles, genital or oral sex contact and artificial insemination are considered risks for contracting AIDS, Keeling said.

To prevent contracting AIDS, Keeling suggests safe sexual

'Knowing everything about your sex partners is very important. Until you can be sure about this information, the use of condoms is a very effective way to prevent transmitting fluids that transmit AIDS.

"AIDS is a biological issue and not a moral comment. AIDS is everyone's problem and the primary responsibility of colleges and universties to AIDS must be education," Keeling said.

A drug called azidothyomidine provides hope for finding a cure for AIDS, he said.

Cheerleaders bartending raises concern

By ANGELA O'HARA Collegian Reporter

A $5,000 budget "isn't enough" for the K-State Cheerleaders, said Kenny Mossman, athletic department administrative assistant, so the cheerleaders tend bar and auction themselves off to earn revenue.

The cheerleaders acted as bartenders at last month's Smash Khadafy Bash in Aggieville, raising controversy among some University officials.

We had no idea that this (particular day chosen to tend bar) would coincide with that other incident (the Khadafy bash)," Mossman said. "That apparently caused some controversy.

"That just doesn't look good for the cheerleaders," said Bill Arck, director of alcohol and other drug related services. "I'm sure Kenny Mossman would say that, too.

"It's a concern of mine, too," Arck said, "in relation to the Khadafy event. Is it appropriate - not to openly endorse, but to be a party to alcoholic consumption?

Bartending in Aggieville bars has been "one of our best fundraisers down through the years," Mossman said. "It's a good way for bars to help them (the cheerleaders) make money.'

"This is a two-sided problem," Arck said. On one side the cheerleaders are trying to get financial backing, he said. On the other side, the question is whether the cheerleaders should "raise money participating in events taking place in drinking establishments

Mossman said he has supervised the cheerleaders' fundraisers for the last few years and doesn't recall any conflict with University policy. "If we're in conflict (with University policy), we'll take the steps immediately," Mossman said.

"I don't know of any" University policy the cheerleaders might have under scholarship. Although violated, said Dorothy Thompson, associate University attorney. "I wouldn't think there would be any problem...since they weren't there as cheerleaders.

'No matter what their dress, they're still K-State cheerleaders,' Arck said.

The NCAA can keep certain students from being affiliated with any form of advertising for businesses. The NCAA policy in-necessary to stop that (bartending) cludes jurisdiction over athletes under scholarship, Mossman said, but does not include athletes not cheerleaders are not under scholarship, Mossman said he is "doing some checking."

> Mossman said the athletic program provides alcohol and drug awareness information to all affiliated students.

> "If we were causing some terrible problem - inspiring riots in Aggieville - I'd be concerned," Mossman said.

Acker to leave batch of issues unresolved

dent of K-State for 11 years. He will step down at the end of June and Jon Wefald will take over the helm.

Acker took over the presidency from James McCain in 1975. He will leave the University and Wefald to deal with problems associated with retention and declining enrollment and morale.

It was one of Acker's goals as president to raise the retention level by 10 percent. That hasn't happened.

One thing that has taken place during Acker's tenure is the construction of new campus buildings. Acker will be remembered most for the many classrooms and buildings added to the campus while he presided. Some of the more prominent construction projects completed during Acker's 11 years are Durland Hall phases I and II, Bluemont Hall, the International Student Center, Throckmorton Hall, Chester Peters Recreation Complex and the buildings and labs of the Veterinary Medicine Complex.

All has not gone well during

Duane Acker has been presi- Acker's term. His positions on several issues left him embroiled in difficult controversies. Nichols Gymnasium was rebuilt and rededicated as Nichols Hall in spite of efforts by Acker to raze the building and turn it into a parking lot.

He has been criticized for his unwavering support of the proposed Fred Bramlage Coliseum, and criticized for not demanding professional studies to determine the marketability and projected income from the structure.

Acker has also been criticized by some people for failure to communicate with his constituency. His habit of "leaving town" when problems reach a boiling point and making himself unavailable for comment is an example of his methods.

Acker may not rank up there legendary K-State presidents like James McCain and Milton Eisenhower, but he will be remembered for his dedication to K-State and his commitment to campus beautification and expansion.

Benefits of a 'Dead Week' ignored

Yippy skippy! Finals week is here! A semester full of agony and delight culminates into five glorious days of sweating palms, a throbbing head and bloodshot eyes Since K-State allows only one week for these excrutiating tests, many students experience these symptoms prematurely because they must cover the majority of their class material during the preceding Adding this work to an already horrendous class schedule of projects, papers and chapter "quizzes" put many students under more stress than they could cope with. To relieve part of the pressure on students, the administration established Dead Week and Dead Day.

Dead Week is the week immediately preceding the first day of semester exams. Theoretically, the University set this week aside as "a period of curtailed social activity" - a period in which all University activities were dead.

With the exception of labs and studios, faculty may only schedule tests covering the latter portion of the class material during the week. If faculty wish to give a comprehensive exam, they must first check with their academic dean's office.

Dead Day is the day before semester exams start. Faculty may use this day as a deadline for projects or papers, but they may not schedule a class or a test.

Theoretically, these accommodations in the class schedule should give students the opportunity to collect themselves and do preliminary studying for comprehensive exams or finish projects without having other obligations to fulfill.

I say "theoretically" because that was the original intent. Unfortunately, many faculty ignore these guidelines and schedule a battery of projects and comprehensive exams during Dead Week and, in some instances, on Dead Day

Wednesday, May 7, 1986 - 4

Some organizations schedule special meetings or awards dinners during this time. While members would like to attend, their workload forces them to miss the event.

In theory, the word "dead" should nullify these activities and class requirements. But in reality, the designation is obsolete. There are no "dead" days, only "dead" students.

It's too late to change project deadlines and test schedules, but it's never too late to voice your complaints to your instructor or college administrators.

If the past week has been one gigantic headache, take 10 minutes out of your busy schedule to discuss the problem. Point out any scheduling conflicts that developed and suggest ways they might be avoided next fall. A professor may not realize that the workload was bordering on unreal and may be willing to revise next year's schedule.

Giving students the chance to catch their breath and finish their coursework before taking their finals was a wonderful idea, but administrators and faculty must enforce the policy for it to be effective.

Laws on gun control have positive effects around in circles for more than 15 years. The National Rifle Association insists that "prohibitive firearms laws don't work."

On the other side are those who believe that laws limiting the sale and purchase of firearms would lower this country's crime rate.

Strict laws and regulations in Great Britain, West Germany, Israel and Japan make it difficult or impossible for individuals to purchase guns. They prevent gun ownership by any but the most criminals. determined Lawmakers in this country refuse to apply our allies' experience and strengthen gun laws. In fact, Congress is doing the opposite.

On Tuesday, the Senate approved legislation that would permit intrastate sales of rifles and shotguns for the first time in 18

The argument has been going years. Dealers in one state could sell to customers from another state, provided laws from both states are followed. Congress was ill-advised in weakening firearms laws in relation to rifles and shotguns.

> Such a change would cause an increase in violent crime.

However, federal lawmakers left in force a ban that prevents intrastate handgun sales. Considering the power of NRA lobbyists, the sale of handguns across state boundaries may not be far off.

There is no reason why laws that work in Great Britain or West Germany would not work in this country. Softening the 1968 Gun Control Act will do nothing to make the public safer. If anything it should be strengthen-

Lafene a bargain

One of the most important services this University offers to students is the health care at Lafene Student Health Center. Last year Lafene performed 3,753 physical examinations, gave 4,223 immunizations and sensitivity tests, and filled 34,555 prescriptions. There were 59,611 outpatient visits, a daily average of 176 outpatients. There were also 32,254 outpatients seen by medical staff members.

Even though Lafene plays a invaluable role in student health care here at K-State, many students take Lafene for granted. Many people fail to realize that medical care outside of K-State would cost much more.

Where else can an individual see a doctor and receive an immunization at no charge and have a complete physical for just over $20. Many students don't feel the $5 fee increase is necessary, but without an increase Lafene will be $1.1 million in debt by fiscal year 1990, according to the Lafene Student Health Center Subcommittee Report for 1986. Students can either pay a little more now, or a lot later.

Editor,

Lines, frustration and chaos are all words that can be used to describe the attempt to complete an assignment for the class, Introduction to Personal Computer. The problem of too few computers and printers needs to be addressed.

Four hunderd and seventy-five students are enrolled in personal computing this semester. However, there are only 25 computers and three printers available to the students of the class. Of the 25 computers, only 23 are hooked up to a printer. The student to computer ratio is approximately 20 to 1; and the student to printer ratio is approximately 158 to 1.

As a result of this lack of hardware, waiting over an hour to get on a terminal is not uncommon. And when you do get on a terminal and need to print part of an assignment, there is usually a line:

My suggestion to the directors of the University's computing activities is that over the summer they purchase at least 10 more computers and three printers for the class. This would bring the ratios that I mentioned down to reasonable figures. I hope that this suggestion is considered so this will not be a problem to students in the class next

Donate excess food

K-State students have been very suppor tive of the Flint Hills Bread Basket, helping reduce food waste and hunger within the community. These efforts have helped immeasureably.

As students prepare to leave their apartments, FHBB invites them to contribute unopened foodstuffs to the food bank. Every bit helps.

Call the Bread Basket at 537-0730, and a volunteer will pick up the food. Or the food can be dropped off at 901 Yuma - a small white building behind the Douglass Center.

Proud of K-State

This University has a problem and it's being overlooked by just about everyone. This problem is not the Department of Intercollegiate Athletics or student enrollment. No, this problem, if solved, would lead to solutions to other problems. The major problem at K-State is student morale.

We've long been presenting the negative aspects of K-State. We believe it's time to look at the positive factors.

Many students chose this school for its low enrollment and friendly atmosphere. The low enrollment provides a lower studentteacher ratio, thus providing more attention to a student, which leads to better learning. A walk through campus collects many greetings and small talk, and our Union, ranked fifth nationally, magnifies this friendliness.

We realize that K-State is known as a school of agriculture, but that's not all we should boast. The College of Veterinary Medicine is one of the finest in the nation. Also among the tops are our colleges of Architecture and Design and Engineering. Our colleges of Human Ecology and Business Administration and the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications are some of the finest in the Midwest.

The different types of living groups are usually a good way to build morale, but feuds about who is the best just takes away from that. The Interfraternity and Panhellenic councils, along with a panel of independent living groups and the KSU Association of Residence Halls should find a way to work together and boost the pride of K-State, not tarnish it by deciding who ranks supreme.

In K-State's time of need, let's show people that we are proud to be here and not down the road. Tell people you're a Wildcat and proud

Yearbook mistake

The yearbooks had finally arrived. A year of waiting was over and we could enjoy the past year. I can remember walking over to the Union to have my picture taken in the rain and later choosing which proof was the best. Then I opened the yearbook and found someone else's picture by my name.

I called the office of Student Publications Inc., which is in charge of the yearbook, and they said they would refund my money but that I would have to give the book back. I feel that this was the wrong solution.

I feel that they should have offered a refund and asked me if I wanted to keep the book. I didn't mess up - they did. So now I am faced with the decision, do I give the book back and get the refund or do I keep the memories of just how poorly put together this yearbook is. At least it is for me.

Students can expect to come back to a revamped K-State Union Bookstore next fall. The bookstore will undergo changes over the summer which should create a one-store image rather than the current twostore image.

"We basically want to switch the top and bottom floors," said Mary Lou Hutchison, bookstore manager. She said the textbooks will be upstairs, and all other merchandise, including trade books and magazines, will be on the ground floor.

The top floor will be closed off, leaving accessibility only through the ground level.

Hutchison said having two entrances with cash registers at each not only detracts from store continuity, but reduces the effectiveness of employees' labor.

"Many people come in on the ground level and all they see is books. At some times during the year, like right now, all they see is empty shelves," Hutchison said.

She said some people might not realize there is an upper level in the store and that the store sells merchandise other than books.

As well as switching the two levels, Hutchison said the upper level will be clerk service only during periods of the year when textbook demand is low

"Of course during peak textbook sales time, the upper level will be open to students. During other times, we will sell textbooks, but the clerks will go upstairs to get them for the will make labor more efficient. The bookstore is getting new cash registers in early June. Hutchison said it was decided this would be a good time to do the moving and redecorating. The cash registers will be computerized and will only be at the entrance of the ground level.

Hutchison said having only one entrance with cash registers will mean fewer staff members will be needed to run the registers and more staff members will be able to help students.

The idea to make the change was a group effort between Hutchison and some of the bookstore staff members. They presented their idea to Walt Smith, Union director. Smith approved the idea and recommended the group present it to the Union Governing Board.

Smith said the proposal passed UGB unanimously. George Piper of Franklin, Mass., was brought in as the bookstore's consultant. Smith said Piper wholeheartedly approved of the plan. He suggested some modifications in painting, new lighting and some new fixtures.

move for the store. It will improve 100 percent in attractiveness," Smith

> With end of the semester book buybacks, Hutchison said the staff is more eager than ever for the move. She said with the current system, books are handled about eight times. When the store is redone, about three of the steps will be removed.

Hutchison said when the store gets a shipment of books, they are stored in the Union Ballroom until they are priced. She said not only does the current procedure tie up the ballroom, but the process is difficult for the staff.

When the store is redone, Hutchison said book shipments can be priced in the upper level, leaving the ballroom free for scheduling other activities. She said the redevelopment plan "would just make better use of the physical space.'

The redevelopment is expected to take place after the new cash registers arrive in June. The bookstore will be open during the remodeling.

Politics keep food from reaching hungry in Ethiopia, speaker says

By VICKI REYNOLDS Campus Editor

Hunger in Ethiopia and other African countries is the result of politics, not a food shortage, said Mikel Johnson, northern field secretary of the American Friends Service Committee.

Johnson spoke at a lecture sponsored by Coalition for Human Rights Tuesday in the Union.

Johnson and James Ekwaro, Ugandan diplomat in political science and former executive secretary of All Africa Council of Churches, spoke as part of the Africa Peace Tour in the United

"It's clear that when Americans began giving money for food in Ethiopia in October of '84 they also began to ask 'why is there hunger there?"' she said.

The drought in northern Africa was a factor, Johnson said, but droughts in other parts of the world have not taken the same toll as in Ethiopia. Thus, the hunger did not result from a food shortage, she

"The world today is awash with food." she said. "The hunger there is not because there is a shortage of food, but because there is a shortage of being able to buy and get access to food."

The total amount of food produced in the world has increased 27 percent, Johnson said, indicating that hunger results from something else.

Johnson said hunger in Africa is caused by relief efforts being blocked by military movements.

'What the television programs didn't show was the fighting going on in Africa," she said. "There's not much in the press about the political situation. It's militarism vs. world hunger.

Countries in Africa are politically independent but still economically influenced by the outside world, she said.

"This denigrates the ambitions and needs of the African people themselves," she said.

Johnson said it is "silly" to put a political interpretation on the hunger situation in Africa.

"It is ludicrous to think that most of the people who ask for food and shelter are getting messages from Moscow," she said. "Many of these liberation efforts are seen as Communist."

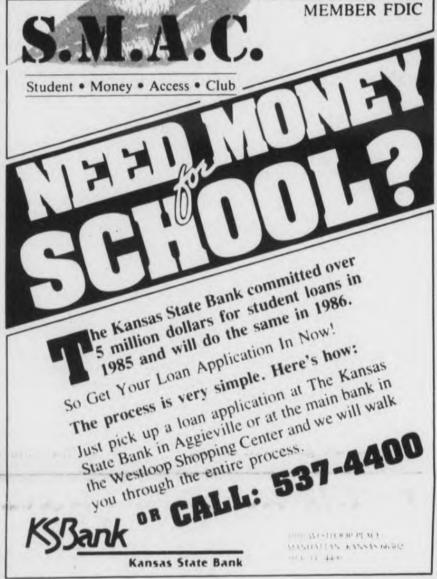

Johnson said people should refrain from dividing the world into East and West and should start looking at it in terms of North and South in Africa

Johnson said the United States is setting up the same situation in Africa it has set up at home more money goes for military expenditures and less to the people.

"This leaves them unprepared for natural disasters such as a drought," she said, "and diverts money from other kinds of social development such as schools and hospitals.

Johnson said without East or West intervention, Africans would be able to handle current political and civil situations.

Resource center warns students against 'acquaintance rape'

By JUDY GOLDBERG Collegian Reporter

Rape is not usually thought of as something inflicted by someone known to the victim.

However, there is a growing awareness on college campuses about the problem of "date rape," also known as "acquaintance rape," "cocktail rape," and "social rape," as stated in a pamphlet from the Women's Resource Center.

Date rape, defined as rape by someone the victim knows, is the most common form of rape.

"Often we think of rapists as psychotics lurking in the bushes; in fact stranger rape is relatively rare compared to date rape," said Katherine Parker, assistant director of the resource center.

Twenty-five percent of all college women have been victims of rape or attempted rape and almost 90 percent of them knew their assailants, according to an article about a study conducted by Ms. magazine, published in its October 1985 issue.

"The Ms. Magazine Campus Project on Sexual Assault" used a nationally representative sample of 35 schools.

There are 7,460 female students at K-State, according to figures obtained from the University Registrar's Office. Of this number, 1,865 K-State women have been victims of rape or attempted rape, according to the averages presented in the study.

Parker said the rapist could be a friend, co-worker, boss, classmate or boyfriend

Most victims of date rape don't report the crime to campus authorities, according to the article.

"We have not had anything reported on this campus in over two years," said James Tubach, K-State Police Department lieutenant of investigations.

One reason for this may be that many women don't realize the sexual assault is considered rape when they are raped by someone they know, Parker said.

The Ms. survey showed that of those women raped, almost 75 percent did not identify their experience

"It is rape even if a woman puts herself in the situation, if she doesn't want to have intercourse," Parker

According to Kansas statutes, rape is legally defined as "sexual intercourse with a person who does not consent to the sexual intercourse."

It includes intercourse "when the victim is overcome by force or fear, when the victim is unconscious or physically powerless or when the victim is incapable of giving consent because of the effect of liquor, drugs or other substances administered to the victim by the offender, or by another person with the offender's knowledge, unless the victim voluntarily consumes or allows the administration of the substance with knowledge of its nature."

"Sexual intercourse' means any penetration of the female sex organ by a finger, the male sex organ or any object. Any penetration, however slight, is sufficient to constitute sexual intercourse," according to the Kansas statute.

The law doesn't include generally recognized health-care practices.

If a woman was coerced into having sex while intoxicated or under the influence of drugs, or tricked into it by someone who insisted she led him on, Parker said the woman should also be considered a rape vic-

A woman pressured into having sex because her date spent a lot of money on her may be thought of as a victim of rape as well, she said.

Parker said she believes there are ways to reduce the occurrence of date rape.

"I think that one of the best strategies, especially in alleviating date rape, is to be able to talk openly about sexual desires," she said. 'Women are often coerced into having sex by the threat that the guy won't go out with them unless they give in. This is damaging to a woman's self-esteem to feel that's the only way she can hold onto a man and as often as not it doesn't work he leaves her anyway," she said.

A woman should not feel obligated to have intercourse with a man with whom she has previously been intimate, Parker said.

"A woman's body is her own and she has a right to refuse sex under any circumstances, whether or not she and the man have been intimate earlier in the relationship," she said.

Pete Obetz, senior in pre-law, said students need to be informed about the problem. Obetz has been researching and giving speeches on date rape for a semester.

"Presentations and speaking at freshman orientation are essential in making new students aware of the problem," he said.

A potential rapist may have certain characteristics that women should be aware of, according to the date rape pamphlet.

The man may show underlying anger toward women, or view women as "sex objects." He may make all of the decisions about what to do and where to go. Or he may idolize the woman, and become angry when he finds out her imperfections, the pamphlet says.

It is suggested in the pamphlet that the woman should express her sexual limits clearly, avoid secluded places, be aware of the effects of alcohol and other drugs and have her own transportation, especially when she's out with someone she doesn't know well

If a woman is raped she should get immediate help from experts, not only for her mental well-being, but also for medical reasons, said Caroline Peine, director of the Women's Resource Center.

"I think the most important thing is for the woman to be checked for injury, pregnancy and venereal disease. She owes it to herself," Peine said.

She said she also suggests filing a report with the police.

"There are choices other than making a full report," she said. A victim can make an informal report or tell someone else what happened and have that person make a thirdparty report, she said.

"It is not put on the statistics as being a rape and is strictly informal and confidential," Tubach said.

He said in an informal or thirdparty report the staff person asks for only the information the victim wants to reveal.

The advantage to making the report, other than being good therapy, is that a description of the rapist is on file with law enforcement officials, he said.

If the suspect is already on file, Tubach said he would contact the other victims to see if they would press charges.

"Human beings stick together," he said. "It's hard for one person to say she's been raped, but if two or three people get together it's much easier.

He said the information would not be used without the victims' consent. Counseling for victims may be obtained at the Women's Resource Center or the Manhattan Crisis

Lisa, a K-State student, went out on a typical date with a former boyfriend. After a night in Aggieville, they drove to Tuttle Creek Reservoir, where he did something she said she never would have suspected he raped her.

"He suggested that (sexual) things happen and I obviously didn't want them to, but they did,' Lisa said. "He was saying things like, 'I know you still love me,' trying to make me feel guilty.

She said in addition to trying to persuade her emotionally, he physically held her down. After he raped Lisa, he drove her home and asked when he could see her again. "I can't remember answering him - I was just numb," she said. "He didn't realize what happened and neither did I.' Lisa said at first she believed she had provoked the rape. "I felt like I had done it - like something I did made him do it to me," she said. "I didn't know how I had brought it on, but I was sure I said, and she realized she was a vichad."

Because she felt guilty, Lisa didn't tell anyone about the rape until three years later.

"I felt like it was my problem and my fault," she said. Lisa said she now wishes she had told someone sooner. "A victim of rape needs to be able to cope with what's happened in order to become a survivor," she said. "You need to be able to take the burden away from yourself by telling someone.

After the attack, her grades fell and she had problems in relationships with friends, family members and men she dated, she said. "It altered every aspect of my life," she said. Three years after she had been raped, she said she began to see information about date rape. At first, Lisa didn't consider herself a vic-

The case is being held in the county attorney's office, said Richard Herrman, K-State Police Department investigator. He said any person found

The Seaton entrance to the tunnelsystem had been closed off by plywood panels and a door

"Signs are posted on most of the entrances, at this point," Herrman said, "warning that anyone who enters can be charged with criminal trespassing.

Any person who enters a building on campus by way of the underground tunnels can be charged with burglary, he said. Herrman said the KSU Police Department has wanted to close all the entrances to the tunnel system, but ran into legal problems because the entrances have to be open in case a worker gets trapped in the tunnels. Herrman said tunneling is not only illegal; it's dangerous. The tunnel system contains the hot water pipes to University buildings, as well as electrical wiring and cables.

A new door with a lock and handle was built last week by University Facilities personnel to cover the Seaton entrance.

WASHINGTON - President Reagan got the tough words on terrorism he wanted from the Tokyo summit, but whether effective action will follow remains an unanswered

There is precedent for believing that the statement agreed to by the leaders of seven industrialized nations will fade from memory, its provisions largely ignored as individual governments find national selfinterest outweighing any desire for international cooperation.

Such was the fate of the agreement reached by the same nations in 1978 when they met in Bonn, West Germany, and declared their joint concern over "terrorism and hostagetaking.

They addressed some of the same issues treated at the 1986 summit. "Nobody ever did anything about it," said Thomas M. Ashwood, security analyst for the Air Line Pilots Association. Ashwood said France "blocked every attempt to my knowledge, every attempt to invoke the provisions of the Bonn agreement.'

Is there any reason to believe then that the call from Tokyo for "improved extradition procedures" to bring terrorists to trial will prove workable? Had this statement been a part of the record, would Italy have detained Mohammed Abbas, the radical Palestinian leader the United States wanted held in connection with the hijacking of the cruise ship Achille Lauro and the murder of one of its passengers, Leon Klinghoffer.

The statement from the Tokyo summit certainly was greeted in Washington with some skepticism by authorities on terrorism.

"It's all very nice and I hope we can live up to some of it," said

Robert Kupperman of the Georgetown Center for Strategic and International Studies.

Robert Hunter, who served on the National Security Council under President Carter, said one problem was getting some understanding of "what we mean by terrorism."

Both Hunter and Kupperman cited as an example the support the Irish Republican Army receives from Americans. The British are as concerned about what they consider terrorist acts of the IRA as the Reagan administration is about actions it says are spawned by Col. Moammar Khadafy.

"We'll be pushed further and further," said Kupperman "especially if there's some embarrassment such as an IRA murderer here and we refuse to extradite him because we call it a political crime.

Such steps as increased police and intelligence cooperation and a reduction in the size of diplomatic and consular missions, specifically those of Libya, already were under way when the leaders agreed to their state-

But there was no sign in the summit statement or in the words of anonymous briefers that the United States could expect any more cooperation for military strikes than it received when U.S. planes bombed Libya on April 15. In fact, French officials made a point of publicly stating that their government's stand against allowing U.S. planes to use French air space would not

The Europeans continue to believe that terrorism can't be dealt with so long as it is isolated from the Arab-Israeli conflict that has provided a cause for radical groups.

Reagan disagreed and told his summit partners "just people with just grievances do not use terrorism as a weapon.'

2 business students 'best' in state

By The Collegian Staff

Two University students have been named among the best Business School Graduates from K-State in the April issue of Kansas Business News.

Kathy Kurtz, senior in marketing, and Russell Rausch, senior in accounting, were among business students in the state named as being the Top of the Class.

Each school's department head nominated students from its department and about 12 names were sent to Dan Bearth, editor of Kansas Business News, who made the final decision, said Randy Pohlman, dean of the College of Business Administration.

"Kansas Business News asked the deans of the school of business at each Regents institution in Kansas to nominate their best business school graduates," Bearth said. "From this list, we've selected nine who we think are typical of the talent, drive and potential achievement that has led so many Kansas graduates to distinguished careers in business and industry.

"I was honored - very honored - to have been selected," Kurtz

Merchants to pay higher fees

By JEFFREY J. BIELSER Collegian Reporter

Aggieville merchants will be paying more in fees next year as a result of action Tuesday night by the Manhattan City Commission.

Commissioners granted the Aggieville Business Improvement District a $10 per year increase in fees to be assessed Aggieville merchants effective Jan. 1, 1987.

The increase is necessary to cover the extended services the business district provides, said Jim Schottler, president of the Aggieville Business Association and member of the improvement district advisory board. In addition to snow and trash removal, the improvement district is also sponsoring improvement plans for Triangle Park, seasonal promotions and a signage project to help identify the Aggieville area, he said.

'With inflation, it's hard to maintain a zero growth in a budget,' Schottler said.

Commissioners also approved the Capital Improvements Program for 1987-1992. The program, with an estimated budget of $37 million, provides planning and funds for anticipated major capital and public improvement projects, said Jim Pearson, assistant city manager.

The program includes the Quality of Life bond issue, major expansion of the city's water treatment facility and improvements for Seth Child's Road, he said.

The price tag for the bond issue was also increased, with commissioners voting to add $100,000 to the previously approved $35,000 to cover the issuance of bonds.

In action concerning downtown redevelopment, commissioners rezoned a large portion of the downtown area at the east end of Poyntz Avenue from service commercial and heavy industrial districts to Central Business District. The area, generally between Leavenworth and Pierre streets, will be occupied by the Town Center Mall.

In the other action, an ordinance was passed vacating several streets and alleys in the downtown redevelopment area. The ordinance was passed 3-0 with Commissioner

Suzanne Lindamood abstaining. Also, the commission agreed to a letter of support for a video to be produced for Manhattan, but rejected a motion requesting monetary support from the city. Commissioners approved a 322-foot extension to the loading zone adjacent to the K-State Natatorium, extending southward along Denison

Education aids local food services

By ANGELA O'HARA Collegian Reporter

The Riley County Health Department has found one way to decrease the number of health violations committed by food-service facilities in the Manhattan area, said Chuck Murphy of the health department.

"Educating management is the key to improving scores" on health department biannual checks, Murphy said. The Kansas State Department of Health and Environment completed a survey this year which reported an average score of 77 (of 100) in Manhattan area food-service facilities, the highest average in six

The increase was due to regulations changes the department implemented in January, Murphy said.

'We were spinning our wheels," he said, "trying to educate all the food handlers" in food service facilities because the turnover rate for parttime workers is high.

"Our feeling is the management will educate and train its staff," he

All the education and training done by the health department this year has involved managers. Murphy credits this policy for increased levels of sanitation in the area's food service facilities. Before the change, Murphy said, most managers placed the health department in an "inappropriate role." He said managers thought motivating the staffs to "keep things clean" was the health department's responsibility.

Other policy changes implemented in January included no longer requiring TB skin tests or food handlers' cards. The city fee was eliminated, allowing the health department the function of closing down an establish-

FINAL WEEK IS RAPIDLY APPROACHING. As the semester ends, students are thinking about the "catch-up" that needs to be done, often resulting in cramming and "all-nighters." For many students, the end of the semester means great anxiety and increased personal pressures.

The outcome of the semester often depends on final exams and sometimes students are unsure of how to cope with the level of stress that is common during final week. Many people need help and encouragement in seeking assistance in dealing with their stress. Faculty may be contacted by students in their classes for advice or referral to campus/community resources.

For assistance with academic and related graduation problems, the offices of the academic deans and academic advisors should provide valuable assistance. Sources of help for personal or emotional concerns are less well known to both students and faculty. The following agencies may be of help in these situations:

A. For assistance with personal problems, test anxiety, vocational decision making, and study skills:

1. Counseling Center, 103 Holton Hall, 532-6927 or walk in.

2. Academic Assistance Center, 204 Holton Hall, 8 a.m.-12 p.m. and 1-5 p.m.,

B. For critical emotional problems or severe physical reactions to stress:

1. Mental Hygiene Clinic, Lafene Student Health Center, 8 a.m.-12 p.m. and 1-5 p.m., 532-6550.

2. Lafene Student Health Center, 532-6544. 3. St. Mary Hospital Emergency Room, open 24 hours, call 776-3322.

4. FONE Crisis Center (a peer helping program), 5 p.m.-8:30 a.m., 532-6565 C. For detailed information about these sevices or consultation about appropriate resources for specific problem situations:

 U-LearN, Holton Hall, 8:30 a.m. to 4 p.m., 532-6442. 2. Dean of Students Office, 102 Holton Hall, 8 a.m. to 5 p.m., 532-6432. 3. DIAL Program for pre-recorded messages on mental health topics and Ekwaro said the freedoms Africans are fighting for are basic liberal actions, not the pros and cons of different systems of democracy.

Ekwaro also discussed U.S. support of oppressive governments in Africa

"We're talking of criminals in power who have no intention of letting that power go," he said.

Ekwaro did not give a plan of action Americans should follow when trying to help Africans achieve independence, but he said it was important the American people know Africans aren't asking them to come

'The African people can take care of the situation," he said.

Farrell to house late composer's legacy

By ANGELA O'HARA Collegian Reporter

A collection of a world-renowned composer's contemporary manuscripts and tapes are in the process of being sent to Farrell Library as a result of Gail Kubik's friendship with Ralph Titus, assistant manager of KKSU.

Gail Kubik won a Pulitzer Prize for "Symphony Concertante," and scored several Hollywood films, among them "Thank A Fool," with Susan Hayward and "Desperate Hours," with Humphrey Bogart. He died unexpectedly July 20, 1984, of kala azar, a rare, infectious blood

His death opened a proverbial can of worms for his brother, Henry, executor of the Kubik estate, because the will had not been updated since

Kubik's recorded will directed his manuscripts go to the Library of

nous muse

When Henry became executor, he requested the Library of Congress to relinquish its right to the manuscripts so they could be sent to K-State as Kubik would have preferred, said Antonia Pigno, coordinator of special collections at Farrell Library

In the summer of 1983, a year before Kubik died, he visited Titus. During the visit they discussed the rewriting of Kubik's will.

'Gail had a premonition about dying," Titus said.

Titus suggested Kubik have a lawyer in California, where Kubik was living at the time, draw up a new will. Kubik said he would, but never That's why the controversy began. Henry was aware of his brother's close ties with Titus and the University, and he has spent the last year working on the manuscript transfer.

Brice Hobrock, dean of libraries, said all of Kubik's manuscripts written before 1960 have already been sent to the Library of Congress, where they will remain. The rest of his manuscripts and most of his tapes will be sent to the University.

The material already received by the Library of Congress is government material, Pigno said. Government material cannot be transferred. She said the remaining Kubik manuscripts are being sent to Farrell Library vis-a-vis an agreement that microfilm copies of the manuscripts written since 1960 be sent to the Library of Congress.

"There's literally a houseful of things," Titus said. "It's taken quite some time to go through. He was a pack-rat. He saved everything.

"Much of the tape collection was done in the '50s and '60s," Titus said. "It all needs to be dubbed. That'll take years. There's so much of it."

The amount of time involved in sifting through all the material is to be credited for the large amount of information to be included in the Farrell collection.

Kubik was born in Oklahoma and was brought up in Kansas, Titus said. He came to K-State in the late '60s as a composer in residence for a

One of his responsibilities was to compose the dedication for McCain Auditorium in 1970. The oratorio is titled "A Record of Our Time."

Kubik began composing in his early teens, Titus said. His first award was won after Kubik's mother entered "The Night Has A Thousand Eyes" in a contest sponsored by the Kansas Federation of Music Clubs. He won $15 as "Best Composition of the Year.'

He was studying to become a professional violinist at Juilliard School of Music in New York when he wrote the composition. Titus said Kubik attributed his turn to composing to his winning the contest.

Titus said his friendship with Kubik grew "from yelling at each other" while working on projects. The two met when Titus was doing an interview with Kubik. After the interview, Kubik asked Titus if he would edit a score he was writing for a Czechoslovakian filmmaker while Kubik was at the University. Titus agreed, they settled on a price and began work.

"Gail is a night person," Titus said. They taped the music in the All-Faiths Chapel auditorium, starting around midnight. "He's a perfectionist," Titus said. The editing process took him longer than he had planned. He said he told Kubik he owed him above what he'd paid him and planned to cash in

"I called in my chips (in 1969)," Titus said, "when I began constructing a piece on Dwight D. Eisenhower." Titus said he needed a suite to use, and he called Kubik to do the job.

The two kept in touch after that. Titus said, and formed the friendship which has led to the reception of the Kubik collection.

"Gail Kubik was a very contemporary composer," Titus said. "Mainstream...one of the movers and shakers.'

Titus said Kubik wrote "Gerald McBoing-Boing" for a cartoon film written by Dr. Seuss. The cartoon features a boy who can't talk, so he uses sounds instead.

"This kind of musical animation had never been done before," Titus said. "The animation was very sur-

Closed boating facility leaves Tuttle Creek without marina

Task force fights for new marina

By LESLIE ALLEN Collegian Reporter

Boaters at Tuttle Creek Reservoir may find an inconvenience this season - the closing of the Spillway

The marina has been closed at the reservoir and will not open this summer, said Becky Blake, director of the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce Convention and Visitors Bureau.

In an effort to resolve the situation, the chamber has organized a Marina Task Force "to study the situation and create an environment at Tuttle Creek Reservoir where there would be a viable interest among investors to invest in a marina, not necessarily (the Spillway Marina)," Blake said. Members of the task force are chairman Gary Jones, Bob Muto, Jim Reagan, Lowell Jack and Fritz

"The bottom line is that there is not a marina operating, and it is important to us to have a marina,' Blake said. "We think that it is important to the community."

The chamber is concerned that, without a marina, safety will be a problem and lake usage will go

"It's a safety hazard as well as a real inconvenience not to have a marina, and obviously we're concerned that the usage will drop off," Blake said.

She said although not much could be done toward a short-term solution, the task force is meeting with the U.S. Army Corps of Engineers this week "to talk about the possibility of having a marina in a corps operating situation."

'We do feel there were a couple of big problems associated with the marina at Spillway, and that is accessibility - or the inconvenience from town - and the requirement of a parking permit for the state park," Blake said.

The funding of such a project is uncertain at this point, she said.

"I do know that the corps group is not able to fund solely recreational developments 100 percent," Blake said. "That has to be a cost-share program.

"If this is where we feel like the marina should be, and we need these things developed to attract somebody in to own and operate a marina, who has to pay for that, and what's it going to cost?" she said.

Previous owner blames economy

By LESLIE ALLEN Collegian Reporter

Changes in the local economy led to the December closing of Spillway Marina, said Jack Wixom, former owner and operator of the Spillway

He said declining student enrollment and changes in parking permit prices are among these economic

"A few years ago when the park permits weren't so high, the traffic flow was a lot better, and now that the permits have gone up to a $15 annually and $2 daily, it's limited the amount of traffic around this particular area," Wixom said.

He said efforts to have the Pottawatomie County Commission assume control of the facility were unsuccessful Wixom said that "being based on a college economic-orientated community, and also the economic level of the military, people just found better ways to spend their money with money being as tight as it has been the last few years.

"I notice (the declining flow) because early in the spring before they start enforcing the parking permits, there's a lot of traffic with both the college and military through the park and it's evident in the sales," he

"As soon as they start enforcing the parking permit regulations, the traffic cuts down at least 50 percent and maybe more.

In addition to students, Wixom said, Nebraska sailing and yacht club used the marina but now uses Tuttle Cove and other lakes.

Wixom said he has concerns about public safety

'We could get in a boat right away when we were called for an emergency on the lake, and now it is up to the Fish and Game supervisor," Wixom

"The police have to locate a Fish and Game person first, and then he has to go get a boat and take it up there to launch and then get out on the lake," he said. "An immediate response can certainly be a lifesaving measure (in the case of a boating accident)."

The reservoir's main purpose is flood control, Wixom said.

"Tuttle Creek was one of the first major reservoirs to be built primarily for flood control, and it remains for that purpose," he said. "Recreation and water resource are secondary objectives of the lake.'

In order to improve the situation, Wixom said he thinks congressional measures are needed.

"I think the community should get some congressional pressure and get the purpose of the lake changed," he to 100 hours on the case alone. He said solving this case will eliminate a number of future cases.

"We have talked to them one at a time over the last month," Hermann said. "They nidn't all go out at the same time to do the crimes, but they were all aware of the activities.'

Hermann said the juveniles gave the property back so they wouldn't have to pay for it. "A lot of the stolen property has already been paid back by the in-surance company," he said. "It could be up to a year, however, for the victims to get their property back if the insurance company has not paid for it. It depends on the court system."

If the juveniles plead not guilty, it could be up to a year before the victims recover their property. If a plea bargain is conducted, the recovery time could be shorter. The court has the authority to give the items back.

"This involved not only victims on the KSU campus, but also Junction City, Manhattan and Fort Riley," he said. "Junction City has recovered items from two cases involving the same juveniles. It took three departments to solve the cases.'

NCAA ruling raises hope in K-State case

By TIM FITZGERALD Assistant Sports Editor

A National Collegiate Athletic Association ruling on Monday might offer a ray of hope for the K-State appeal of basketball star

The NCAA Eligibility Committee - the same committee which heard K-State's case concerning Coleman - ruled Miami (Fla.) basketball player Tito Horford eligible at the end of the first semester.

Norris Coleman's eligibility case.

Horford, a 7-foot-1 center, was under investigation for violating NCAA rules concerning amateurism. Horford never denied he was at fault, but did say he was unaware of the rules.

According to Miami's Sports Information Director Karl Schmitt Jr., the investigation concerned Horford's participation on the Club Maco Team - the national team in his home country of Santa Domingo.

Schmitt said Santa Domingan rules concerning amateurism varied from the NCAA's, so Horford was misled to believe he was meeting NCAA requirements concerning professionalism.

Horford, though, was violating NCAA rules and when he returned to the United States to play basketball, the NCAA began to look into his past. The ruling by the NCAA recognized Horford had no prior knowledge of the rule and thus will have to sit out only four to six games next season for the Hurricanes. The aspect of the ruling which is similar to the Coleman case is the unknowing violation of NCAA rules which apparently lessened the penalty. Questions surrounding the Coleman case concern Coleman's high school grades from Paxon High School in Jacksonville, Fla. When Coleman enrolled at K-State, an eight-semester transcript - signed by his high school principal - was sent to the Office of Admissions.

The Eligibility Committee ruled high school was using a six-semester transcript system when Coleman graduated high

The transcript sent to K-State stated Coleman had a grade point average above the NCAA minimum of 2.0, but under a sixsemester transcript, Coleman's grades were not over a 2.0.

K-State and Coleman claim the violation of NCAA rules took place unknowingly since the Office of Admissions received a signed high school transcript from Paxon.

Thus, Coleman was ruled ineligible to receive financial aid and the NCAA stated Coleman must sit out until Feb. 27, 1987, if he stays at K-State and return all of the financial aid he received at

The NCAA also stated Coleman may transfer and become immediately eligible at any other NCAA school. However, Big Eight Conference rules prohibit Coleman from transferring to another Big Eight school without losing a year of eligibility.

Coleman and K-State chose to appeal the case to the NCAA Infractions Committee since the 24-year-old Coleman does not want to sit out a year at K-State, but does want to stay.

Two of the K-State officials involved in the appeal, Athletic Director Larry Travis and Assistant Athletic Director Lee Moon were both out of town on Tuesday. K-State's faculty representative to the NCAA Robert Snell, professor of civil engineering, said K-State will be looking into the Horford ruling's impact on the Coleman appeal.

"We are looking at some other cases which may have some bearing on our case as far as precedent," Snell said.

"I have to see some facts (in the Horford case) to see how similar they really are. We are investigating some things which will have some bearing on this particular interpretation (concerning Coleman's eligibility L"

Snell said although no appointment has been made with the Infractions Committee to hear Coleman's appeal, he would expect the final ruling would be made within the next two weeks.

Winning common in Carpenter's life

By ANNETTE FANKHAUSER Collegian Reporter

Winning track and field events has been a way of life for Felicia Carpenter ever since she started participating in the sport in the seventh Carpenter qualified for the National Collegiate Athletic Association Track and Field Championships, which will be held in Indianapolis June 4-7. She will participate in the triple jump.

To qualify for the nationals in the triple jump, a jumper must leap 41 feet, four inches.

"They take 10 qualifying jumps and only six made it," Carpenter said. "The standards might be set too high."

Carpenter holds the all-time Big Eight Conference women's record for the triple jump. She set the record, 41-812, at the Drake Relays at Des Moines, Iowa, and qualified for nationals with this jump as well.

She also holds a K-State record in the triple jump. She received the record first with a 39-1012 jump at the Paper Tiger Invitational meet at Baton Rouge, La. She broke the record at the Kansas Relays in Lawrence with a jump of 41-2. She then went on to break mark for a third time at Drake.

The qualifying jumps were made indoors, which makes some difference, she said.

"I feel I do better outdoors because I condition better," she said.

The triple jump was, at one time, most widely termed the 'hop, skip and jump.' She explained it as a three-phase process.

"In the first phase you plant with your one foot and take a running stride in the air, and then plant with the same foot again. In the second phase, you step on the second foot, and the third phase you jump off the same leg," she said.

Carpenter is among the top onethird of Big Eight competitors in the 400-meter intermediate hurdles this Winning is not new to Carpenter. She set a long jump record in the eighth grade at Martin Luther King Junior High in East St. Louis, Ill., which has not been broken yet.

Carpenter will compete in the triple jump, long jump, intermediate hurdles and mile relay at the Big Eight outdoor meet, May 16-17 in Boulder, Colo.

Felicia Carpenter will compete in the triple jump, long jump, intermediate hurdles and the mile relay at the Big Eight Conference outdoor track meet May 16-17 in Boulder, Colo. Carpenter also qualified to compete in the triple jump at the NCAA track championships June 4-7 in Indianapolis.

Breakthrough. It's a term Coach Steve Miller likes to use when talking about his track and field athletes. And in a year which has seen a number of breakthroughs by team members, Miller is still looking for even more.

Miller has given the team this weekend off to prepare for final exams. Next weekend, however, things begin to heat up again with the Big Eight Championships at Boulder, Colo. Then on June 4-7 at Indianapolis, team members who have qualified will compete in the National Collegiate Athletic Association

In both of these meets Miller, who is leaving his track job to assume full-time the position of assistant athletic director, will be looking for breakthroughs. Kenny Harrison has been among the dominant collegiate track performers in the nation this season with bests of 26-71/2 in the long jump and 55-11 in the triple jump. He won the long jump title at the NCAA indoor meet and took fifth in the triple jump. Still, Miller thinks Harrison is ready to accomplish even more.

"It's hard to tell what he's (Harrison) going to do next. But our training is such that I have a pretty good handle (on what he's doing," Miller said. "I think the next big breakthrough for Kenny is going to come in the long jump.

"At altitude (Boulder), given the right conditions and circumstances, I think Kenny will jump 27-plus feet in the long jump and 56-plus feet (in the triple jump)."

Four-time NCAA runner-up Rita Graves has set two personal and K-State all-time records this season with leaps of 6-11/2 and 6-2. But Graves is another one Miller believes can rise to even greater heights.

"I think that Rita is just about ready to have a monumental breakthrough - even though she already has," Miller said. "I think Rita's going to jump really high and I'm thinking in terms of maybe 6-3, 6-4. I think it's right around the cor-

The Big Eight and NCAA meets are the only two meets of the season where team scores are kept. And to be sure, Miller is paying attention to team scores. But in his mind, the individual comes first.

"I still think you have an obligation to the athlete - to give them the best opportunity to be the best they can be." Miller said.

Still. Miller has set some goals for both his men's and women's teams heading into Big Eight competition.

'With our men, I've analyzed the meet several times, and a legitimate goal for them is a top-four finish. We could be as high as third," Miller

Miller's top choices in the men's meet are Oklahoma and defending champion Iowa State

On the women's side, Miller thinks the Wildcats would have had a legitimate shot at the title, if not for injuries to sprinters Anita Isom and Karen Brown.

"Based on (meet favorite and defending champion) Nebraska's status - they've had some problems and injuries - we really had a legitimate shot to win the Big Eight," Miller said.

Two other athletes with title aspirations at the Big Eight and NCAA meets are distance runners Jacque Struckhoff and Chris Vanatta. Struckhoff will compete in the 3,000-meter run and 5,000-meter at the Big Eight meet run while Vanatta will run in the 1,500 and 3,000. Struckhoff has qualified for the NCAA in the 1,500, 3,000, 5,000 and 10,000-meter runs.

"It's hard to tell," Miller said of Struckhoff's and Vanatta's chances at the NCAA. "The competition in the distance events for women has really improved in the last few years. I think realistic goals for them are to be all-Americans and place high in the meet."

Other NCAA qualifiers for K-State and their events are as follows: Brad Speer, high jump; Anne Stadler, 3,000; Vanatta, 5,000; Felicia Carpenter, triple jump.

Thornton's 2 homers lead Indians past KC

By The Associated Press

CLEVELAND - Andre Thornton belted two homers and drove in five runs Tuesday night as the Cleveland Indians won their ninth straight game, beating the Kansas City Royals 6-1 in a baseball game called because of a thunderstorm in the bottom of the fifth inning.

The victory kept Cleveland in first place in the American League East.

Thornton lined a two-run homer to left in the first inning after Julio Franco had doubled, then lofted a three-run homer to left following singles by Andy Allanson and Brett Butler in the third.

The homers were the third and fourth of the year for Thornton, giving him 201 in his career with the Indians in five innings. The right-hander fanned the first three hitters he faced on wicked knuckleballs and finished with six strikeouts.

Tom Candiotti, 2-2, got the vic-

Kansas City starter Bud Black, 1-3, gave up six runs on seven hits while striking out five in three innings. The left-hander had lasted only two innings in his previous start, a loss to Toronto.

Black left Tuesday's game after giving up singles to Pat Tabler and Carmen Castillo opening the fourth inning. Tabler scored Cleveland's sixth run on Tony Bernazard's sacrifice fly off reliever Steve Farr.

The Royals scored their only run in the fifth on a leadoff double by Jim Sundberg and a runscoring single by Angel Salazar.

The two teams will meet again at 7:35 tonight. Bret Saberhagen (2-2), a shutout winner in his last tory, giving up one run on six hits outing, will start for the Royals.

Boston third quarter too much for Hawks

By The Associated Press

BOSTON - Boston scored the last 24 points of the third quarter while holding Atlanta to an NBA postseason record low of six in the period, and the Celtics went on to knock the Hawks out of the playoffs with a 132-99 rout Tuesday night. With Kevin McHale scoring 16 points, the Celtics outscored Atlanta 36-6 in the decisive third quarter and captured the playoff series 4-1. They advanced to the Eastern Conference finals against the winner of the Milwaukee-Philadelphia series, which is tied

Atlanta made just two of 19 field-goal attempts in the third quarter, which ended with Boston leading 102-61. Boston notched its 36th consecutive home victory, extending its single-season league record. and won for the 24th time in its last 27 games.

Larry Bird scored 24 of his game-high 36 points to lift Boston to its 11-point halftime lead. McHale finished the game with 25 and Robert Parish had 15.

Atlanta was led by Spud Webb with 15 points and Dominique Wilkins with 13.

HOUSTON, 131 - DENVER, 103 HOUSTON - Akeem Olajuwon had 36 points and 19 rebounds, and Houston outscored Denver 40-20 in the second quarter en route to a 131-103 victory over the Nuggets Tuesday night, giving the Rockets a 3-2 lead in their NBA playoff

Houston could advance to the Western Conference finals with a victory in Game 6 of the best-ofseven series at Denver Thursday

Olajuwon and Ralph Sampson, who added 33 points and 17 rebounds, fueled Houston's second quarter explosion, and the Nuggets never recovered.

Pieces of wisdom for those who return

As I sat down to write this, my final column as a member of the Collegian staff, I did so not knowing what I should say, who I should thank, how I could best express what my last two semesters have meant to me.

Finally, I decided to make this column my last will and testament of sorts - to give certain members of the sports world the gifts I think they deserve to receive and to give credit to the people who have helped me grow and mature throughout the course of this year.

To K-State Athletic Director Larry Travis, I leave the patience and positive attitude I know he will need in getting the K-State athletic department headed in the direction he wants it to be headed in. Keep the faith, Larry, you'll get it done. To head football coach Stan Parrish, I leave the ability to put 30,000-plus fans in the stands at every home game this season. Let's hope the wind dies down, too.

To head basketball coach Lon Kruger, I leave just one thought - be your own man and you will make yourself the legend your predecessor

DAVID SVOBODA Editor

To head baseball coach Gary Vaught, I leave the knowledge that an off year doesn't destroy a program. Be proud of what you've done and build on it. Fall ball is just a few months away. To the World Champion Royals, I leave the one thought I've been leaving my readers with for two semesters - get a long ball threat to hit behind George Brett and a dynasty will be set into motion. To the Kansas City Chiefs, I leave the ability to restore the faith of the fans - many of whom haven't had it since Christmas Day about 15 years

To Kansas basketball coach Larry Brown, I leave the hope that a man who has given so much of himself to others less fortunate will never leave the Midwest. Thanks for caring, Larry

To former Oklahoma State basketball coach Paul Hansen, I leave the hope that your successor will possess the same caring and loving nature you do, sir. Thank you for sharing it with your players and with us.

To Oklahoma basketball coach Billy Tubbs, I leave one thing - humility. While I'm at it, I also leave your players the ability to recognize the national anthem. Teach them some respect, please. To my favorite professional wrestlers, Rowdy Roddy Piper and Nature Boy Ric Flair, I leave the ability to be as brash and arrogant as ever before. I love watching you two rubbing bananas in people's faces and taking those same prelim bums "to school." There truly is nothing more enjoyable - in an escapist sense - than watching a well executed DDT, gourd-buster or figurefour leglock.

To readers of the Collegian sports page, I leave you with one thought work with the sports staff and they will do their best to work with you. Relationships don't have to be antagonistic to work.

To future members of the Collegian sports staff, I leave you the ability to check, double-check and check again - accuracy counts for everything. Remember to be fair and to try to give everyone adequate coverage - to some groups a little means a lot.

To Dave Adams, Lillian, Jeri, Patty, Fitz, Tip, Todd, Tony and Darfan, I give you my thanks for the most fun I've had working with anyone ever regardless of the problems we encountered along the way.

And finally to the men of Delta Sigma Phi, and specifically my brother, my new "Little Bro," and T-BRO, I leave you with one thought - I couldn't have done it without your love and support. And thanks to you, too, Netter and Kris.

Remember, readers, to take the advice of a famous television "shrink," Sidney Freedman, "Pull down your pants and slide on the

NCAA passes drug policy for basketball

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - If a team in next year's National Collegiate Athletics Association Basketball Tournament has one player who tests positive for drugs, it may be kicked out of the competition even if the tournament has already begun, NCAA President Jack Davis said Tuesday.

"This is a very significant thing," Davis said in an interview following a news conference. "We think the institution and the team should bear some responsibility if one of its players is found to be using drugs."

Davis said this new wrinkle in the drug-testing program approved at last January's NCAA convention was adopted by the NCAA Executive Committee at its meetings in Kansas City this week. He emphasized that details are yet to be worked out but that the Executive Committee hopes to put the policy into effect for all men's and women's team champion-

"It would apply only if the player who tests positive had participated in earlier competition in the tournament or the championship," Davis

NCAA schools approved a lengthy drug-testing proposal at their convention in New Orleans, including a list performance-enhancing substances to be banned as well as street drugs such as cocaine and marijuana. Considerable work remains, Davis said, in deciding how the tests will be administered and

K-State tops SW Missouri State

SPRINGFIELD, Mo. - Leo Seiler drove in three runs, two of them with an eighth-inning single that gave K-State the lead on its way to a 9-6 baseball victory over Southwest Missouri State Tuesday

Seiler's single off loser Matt Piwowarski, who came on in the fifth, followed a leadoff double by Pat Stivers, a groundout, an intentional walk and a stolen base

Stivers was 4-for-5 and drove in two runs, the last on a solo homer in the ninth. The victory went to Scott Lichlyter, who relieved Brad Harvick in the fifth. Southwest Missouri first baseman Steve Meyer hit his 18th home run, a solo shot in the fourth.

The victory raised Kansas State's record to 23-32, while Southwest Missouri is 44-14.

New All-Star ballot introduced

NEW YORK - The largest computerized sports ballot in history, offering 208 players with starters listed from every big league team, was introduced by major league baseball Tuesday for its 57th All

Fan balloting will be conducted from May 16 through July 6 in major league stadiums and through June 15 in minor league parks. For the first time since baseball restored the All-Star ballot to the fans in 1970, the vote will be conducted by baseball itself, at "a substantial cost," Burns said. It had been underwritten for 16 years by Gillette's Safety Razor Division.

The All-Star Game will be played in the Houston Astrodome Tuesday night, July 15.

NCAA alters baseball format

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - The NCAA, with an eye toward a possibly lucrative network television contract, has decided to alter the format of its College World Series and use a final-four type structure effective in 1988, it was announced Tuesday.

NCAA President Jack Davis said at a news conference that the bracket for the baseball tournament will also be expanded from 40 teams to 48. For more than 35 years, the NCAA has used a double-elimination format for the finals of its College World Series with eight teams advancing to the finals in Omaha, Neb. But this presents scheduling problems from television's point of view.

With a double-elimination, you never know for sure when the championship game will be played," said Jerry Miles, NCAA director of men's championships.

Favoring a fee

Sports Editor,

The athletic program of an institution is a public reflection of the school that it represents. Currently, most of the Kansas State sports are towards the bottom of the Big Eight. This is obviously a negative image for our university to project. One of the ways that we could help improve our athletic record would be to install a $15 athletic fee that would be added to tuition. This athletic fee would also act as a season ticket into Kansas State athletic events. Many of the Big Eight schools already have such a fee and have had great success with it. I believe that an athletic fee like this would put more money in the budget, people in the stands and wins in the victory column.

Kansas State currently has the smallest athletic budget in the Big Eight. It is half the size of Oklahoma's and Nebraska's. We can not expect to recruit against schools with budgets twice our size and still get quality athletes. Unfortunately if we are going to be competitive on the playing field, we must have at least a competitive athletic budget.

Although I don't think that an athletic fee is going to change our athletic program around overnight it is a step in the right direction. With new coaching staffs taking over and hopefully the installment of this athleitic fee, I think we may be looking at the beginning of a new era in Kansas State sports.

Story contains factual errors

Some factual errors occured in Tom Perrin's sports column in Tuesday's Collegian. Sixthyear volleyball Coach Scott Nelson was not identified as being the longest-tenured K-State coach. The volleyball team placed third in the Big Eight Conference in 1985. Also omitted were 1977, 1982 and 1984 K-State women's basketball Big Eight titles and the 1983 women's cross country ti-

Extension forester sells tree seedlings for conservational use

By SUE DAWSON Collegian Reporter

Anyone searching for just the right combination of tree seedlings need look no further than a grove of ponderosa pines on Claflin Road and the office of extension forestry, where seedling bundles are sold to the public for conservational purposes

Bill Loucks, associate professor of extension forestry, is the department's expert on seedling trees and is also in charge of the seedling sales. This is Loucks' 11th year as a "tree" extension forester, as he is referred to by fellow workers.

The seedlings are not sold for landscaping, ornamental purposes or resale, Loucks said. At the time of purchase, a customer must sign an agreement that the trees will only be used for conservational purposes, such as windbreaks, erosion control, wildlife, woodlots and Christmas trees

"There's no restriction on who can buy them, only their use," he said. Windbreaks make up most of the orders, Loucks said, ranging from 50 percent to 70 percent. Christmas trees, wildlife and woodlot plantings each receive about 10 percent of the orders, he said, while erosion control receives 1 percent to 2 percent.

Windbreaks last 40 to 50 years and provide good protection, he said. Most are used in residential or livestock situations. However, farmers don't use the plantings in their fields because it takes up additional land, Loucks said.

The wildlife bundles are a combination of woody and grass cover and food which can accommodate different species of wildlife covering at least half an acre. They offer a variety of trees and shrubs: Eastern red cedar, autumn olive, Tatarian honeysuckle, choke cherry, Peking cottoneaster, fragrant sumac and black locust.

"For wildlife bundles, we stress fruit production and density of cover," Loucks said.

The nongame wildlife bundles create a habitat for wildlife and are part of a contribution which can be claimed as an exemption on state income-tax forms.

The most popular tree is the scotch pine, which Loucks said is a common Christmas tree type. These take between 8 and 10 years to mature before they can be harvested.

The next most popular variety is the Eastern red cedar, the backbone of the windbreak, he said. Austrian pine is third on the list and is used for both Christmas trees and windbreaks.

The largest order Loucks ever received was from a private farmer for 30,000 Christmas trees. He said an order for 1,000 to 2,000 is considered large. The most popular question clients ask Loucks is what the fastestgrowing tree variety is. He said there is no definite answer without knowing the soil type and future weather

'When we try to find plants, we have to think about their function, but even more important is that they will tolerate our climate," he said.

"Most of these plants wind up in a semi-wild environment situation, so they need to be pretty tough."

Two types of seedling trees, which have aged 1 to 2 years, are available for purchase: root-grown, which are purchased from private, state and federal growers both nationally and internationally; and container, which are grown on the premises.

Some of the more exotic bare-root plantings state and extension offices purchase are autumn olive and Arborvatae, which are imported from South East Asia.

The bare-root seedlings are sold in units of 50, Loucks said.

The container-grown plantings are grown at the extension office and are sold in units of 30, with discounts on orders of 16 units or more.

Container-grown plantings are more expensive but contain the entire root system of the tree, which Loucks said makes them more hearty in some cases.

They just don't go through that shock (of being uprooted for sale and transportation)," he said. "They also have more initial growth than bare-root plants."

The bare-root variety does better in moderate conditions where there is drip irrigation and weed removal. Loucks said many first-time planters use the container variety. 'Many of our clients have never planted before on this scale, so they are more confident with containergrown," he said.

The office has two seasons: fall, when only container-grown plantings are sold; and spring, when both types are available.

The spring shipments begin during the second and third weeks of March, and Loucks said it takes about three weeks to catch up on shipping orders. Now the department frequently ships orders the day after they come in.

Loucks said he has two permanent staff members and many students who work part time.

The seedling sales program is sponsored by both the federal and state governments. It began in Kansas in 1928, but the Manhattan office opened in 1957. "Our program is pretty small." Loucks said. "Some states have 10 to 20 times the size of ours." Loucks said planting records in Kansas date back to the 1850s.

"Apparently the very earliest settlers planted trees," he said. "We think of people as being too busy to plant, but they were concerned with the environment. Planting had been a priority to Kansans ever since they Loucks said in their 30 years of operation, the University service has shipped more than 34 million trees.

"In recent years, we've been selling 1.1 million trees per year and 6,000 orders," he said.

In 1980, the forestry department sold 1.4 million trees, but this figure has dropped steadily, and only 1.1 million seedlings were sold in 1985.

"I think the rural economy is really discouraging people from planting new seedling trees," he said.

With an unsure future, Loucks said, few people are willing to invest in long-term plantings if they are not sure they will have their farm in the next few years.

POSITION ANNOUNCEMENT

Kansas State University Manhattan, Kansas 66506

POSITION:

Kansas State University is seeking candidates to fill up to eight Admissions Counselor positions. Options exist for both ten and one half and twelve month appointments and the University would consider having Admissions Counselors in permanent work stations in selected metropolitan locations in Kansas.

RESPONSIBILITIES:

Admissions Counselors are responsible for contacting and recruiting prospective students who are currently enrolled in high schools, community colleges, and other post secondary institutions in designated geographic locations in Kansas and the surrounding states. Admissions Counselors represent Kansas State University at college day programs, school visits and other special admission functions and are responsible for advising prospective students about the programs available at the University and the admission procedures.

QUALIFICATIONS:

Candidates are required to be Baccalaureate degree graduates of Kansas State University: Candidates must be familiar and enthusiastic about Kansas State University and preference will be given to individuals who have demonstrated leadership skills through involvement in campus academic and extracurricular activities. Candidates must be able to communicate well, both orally and in writing, and must be able to meet people easily and adjust quickly to varying situations. The position requires extensive travel and the ability to fulfill position responsibilities in an independent setting away from the University.

SALARY: Competitive

STARTING DATE: August 1, 1986

APPLICATION DEADLINE: Candidate should send letter of application, resume, and three letters of recommendation by June 20, 1986 to:

> Chairperson, Search Committee for Admissions Counselor Positions Vice President for Educational and Student Services Anderson Hall Kansas State University Manhattan, KS. 66506

ELIGIBILITY FOR CARE LAFENE STUDENT HEALTH CENTER

1. Health fees are established upon the recommendation of the Student Senate with approval by the Board of Regents.

2. All students who are enrolled and attending classes during a regular semester or summer session who have paid health fees are eligible for care.

3. Those enrolled in Special Courses, for varying periods of time, who have made previous arrangements for health care coverage at Lafene are eligible for care. (Lists of these students must be furnished prior to being seen at Lafene.)

4. Only students, who have paid the health fee, may elect to have their spouse also covered at Lafene; however, they must pay the spouse fee within 10 days of the time their own health fees are paid. (Children cannot be seen.)

5. Emergency care, prior to referral, will be given anyone who

6. Students enrolled in 6 hours or less, electing not to pay the health fee during the Fall or Spring semesters, who wish to be seen, will be charged $20 for each office visit. This charge continues until the full health fee has been exceeded, then that student will be afforded the same privileges as the regular fee paying student for the remainder of that semester. Students who were enrolled in the Spring and pre-enrolled for the Fall semester but not attending summer school may pay $15 and be eligible for care during the summer. This fee may be paid within 30 days prior to summer registration and ends the day classes begin. A late fee of $20 will be accepted for the remainder of the summer. 8. Health fees are good until 12 o'clock the night the next semester begins.

NOTE: In addition to the above mentioned fees, there are minimal charges for certain supplies and services and the charges are subject to change without prior notice.

reputation in the 21st century to be even stronger than it is in the 20th century," Acker said.

Acker said K-State's move to join the National Merit program was a step in the right direction in attracting students with stronger academic backgrounds to the University.

"We went from about seven or nine semifinalists on campus in the fall of 1977 to about 52 or 54 last fall, so obviously that was a big key," he said. Acker said the problem which may have worried him most after assuming the job, however, was the obvious split between the "non-agricultural" and "agricultural" sectors of the University.

"I wanted to have the University function as a single University to a greater extent. There was quite a bit of stress - non-agriculture vs. agriculture - and it just seemed to me that agriculture wasn't being as effectively served if there was tat

Acker said two specific personnel moves helped bring the two groups kind of stress," he said.

"The establishment of the provost position and putting the top officer in agriculture on the deans' council was important," he said. "I believe we have the University to a greater extent functioning as a single Universi-

Acker's major goal from a financial standpoint was to develop a successful fundraising campaign for a University-related project.

"I wanted to have a successful fundraising drive. Kansas State had not had a large and successful fundrais- tions," he said.

> It's an Oké offer from famous Juarez Tequila! You'll find Juarez served only at the finest Mexican Restaurants. So the next time you're dining out, enjoy Juarez Tequila ing drive," Acker said. "I felt we needed to latch on to a project that would catch the imagination of the supporters to prove to ourselves that we could have a major drive.'

Acker said this goal was met with the campaign which has led to the imminent construction of the Fred Bramlage Coliseum. And he anticipates the fundraising efforts won't stop there.

"Certainly we had a successful fundraising drive for the coliseum," he said, "and we have an expectation on the part of the donors that we'll come back to them and ask for money for a scholarship drive."

Acker said retention would be his top priority if he were remaining as

"I would put a lot of energy on increasing the success rate of our students here at Kansas State - the retention rate, if you please," he said. "I think we can increase it by about 10 percentage units.

"I think this will require a lot of intensive strengthening of our academic advising system, it will cause some intensity and strengthening of our teaching methodology in certain disciplines where the success rate of our students is not consistent with the abilities they bring with them into the courses."

Acker said that the students, faculty and staff he worked with during his tenure made the stay a rewarding one. He said it wouldn't be difficult to characterize those he has worked

"I would characterize them as open, hard working, direct, friendly they like to call people by name and to be called by name, and that is important, especially on the plains and they get a lot of internal satisfac-

"I do observe that people are so enthusiastic about their own disciplines...it is an internal enthusiasm that is self-generating that is so important to the vitality of a university." And the president's hope is that some of that enthusiasm could be transferred into enthusiasm for the University and the individuals working in it. 'Respect yourself. Respect Kansas State University," he said. "If the faculty and the alumni and the students could achieve a level of respect for Kansas State University that equals the level of respect with which this University is held by people across the state of Kansas, by people at other universities and, in the case of some disciplines, worldwide, I'd be very, very pleased. And it would be totally warranted."

WE'RE PAYING CASH FOR YOUR BOOKS NOW!

SELL YOUR BOOKS AT VARNEY'S

(regardless of where you bought them)

AND GET YOUR YELLOW TOKEN

- ★Get your yellow token, which is good for 10% off any non textbook items, when you sell your books during dead week or final week. You decide what the token is worth by the amount you purchase. THE MORE YOU BUY THE MORE YOU SAVE! You can use the token whenever you want. Use it for gifts to take home, for something for yourself or for next semester when you buy your school supplies.
- *Bring all your books to Varney's (regardless of where you bought them) and our buyers will value them individually. You choose what you want to sell! WE BUY BOOKS EVERY DAY! However, you can usually get the most for your books by selling them to us at the end of the semester.
- ★The price we pay for books is determined mainly by two factors—if the books will be used again at K-State and if we need the books for our stock. If we cannot buy your books for our stock, we will offer you the best price we can, based on the national market.
- *Remember, it's what you get for all your books that counts, and we think that the wholesaler we buy for pays the highest prices.
- ★We know you're busy and in a hurry so we have four buyers to take care of you. We try to keep the time you spend in line to a minimum. We also buy until 9:00 at night during dead week & final week.

Waldheim victorious in Austrian election

By The Associated Press

VIENNA, Austria — Kurt Waldheim, the former U.N. secretary-general accused of hiding a Nazi past involving atrocities in the Balkans during World War II, won a smashing victory in Austria's presidential election Sunday.

Interior Minister Karl Blecha declared Waldheim the winner with 2,464,598 votes, or 53.9 percent, of the valid ballots cast. Kurt Steyrer, Waldheim's Socialist opponent, drew 2,107,317 votes for 46.1 percent.

"The result showed that the Austrian people are not prepared to accept these accusations that have been made against me,"

Waldheim said in a victory statement on television.

Waldheim, 67, was backed by the conservative People's Party. The six-year presidency is a largely ceremonial and non-partisan post.

As president, he will receive foreign guests and make state visits to other countries. But legislators in some countries, including the United States, Britain and Israel, are demanding that he be banned because of his activities in the German army.

The Socialists have been in power for 16 years and remain in control of the government. Parliamentary elections are scheduled for next spring, and Waldheim's victory raised the conservatives' hopes of defeating the Socialists next year.

Sunday's balloting was a runoff election. Waldheim and Steyrer were the top finishers in the four-man field in the May election when Waldheim almost received the majority needed to win the presidency in the first round. He won 49.64 percent of the votes.

"I would like to say here with all certainty that this criticism (the allegations about his past) did not come from governments, but exclusively from personal statements, from one minister or the other from Israel," Waldheim said after the final results were

Ceremony marks start of mall construction

By TERESA TEMME Staff Writer

Shovels decorated with green bows dug into the Kansas dirt Friday as 1,000 green and gray balloons rose above a crowd gathered in downtown Manhattan to watch the ground-breaking ceremonies for the $24 million Manhattan Town Center mall.

"The eyes of the state of Kansas are upon us. The spirit of the state of Kansas is with us, but today we celebrate the addition to the downtown of Manhattan," Mayor Rick Mann

"It (the Manhattan Town Center) is not a substitution but rather an expansion of the very heart of this city," he said.

Melvin Roebuck, vice president of Forest City Rental Properties, Cleveland, conducted the groundbreaking ceremonies.

Forest City Rental Properties Corp. has undertaken a joint venture with JCP Realty in developing the mall. JCP Realty is a subdivision of the J.C. Penney Co. Inc., based in New York.

Roebuck said Manhattan was very fortunate because he believes the city has the best administration and staff he has ever worked with.

"I respect you mightily. I found some wonderful people and leaders here...and I want to thank you for letting an outsider become some part of your generous and bright citizenry," Roebuck said.

Developers predict the downtown shopping center will open in the fall of 1987. The revitalization of Manhattan's downtown business district has been planned for more than a decade. Since 1978 city officials have been working to raise the needed capital to assemble and clear the site for redevelop-

"I know that Manhattan is going to become the shining example of what successful urban redevelopement can accomplish," Mann said. "We invite all Kansans to share in the pride that we feel in the city of Manhattan."

In addition to the actual mall site, the downtown district is undergoing improvements to storefronts, streets and sidewalks through the Main Street Project. Manhattan is one of five cities in Kansas participating in the state's Main Street Project, a program originated in 1980 and taken nationwide in 1985 by the National Trust for Historic Preservation.

The city assembled the site by acquiring 75 parcels of land, relocating about 80 businesses, 27 residential units and the Union Pacific railyard using a $9 million Urban Development Action Grant (UDAG), Tax Increment Financing, a Benefit District and other measures.

Actual mall construction financing is the responsibility of the project's developers. Forest City was granted $18.8 million in industrial revenue bonds as incentive financing

A $7 million road improvement program will build a new southern arterial through the city, creating easier access to downtown.

Mann presented to James Ratner, president of Forest City, an architectural rosette stone that was salvaged off a building cleared from the mall site.

Mann explained the rosette stone symbolizes the bridging of the past and the future. He said the spirit and determination the old buildings represented could always be remembered through the rosette.

The rosette will be used as the logo for the mall and will also be used to produce 300 duplicates which will be integrated into the mall's side walls.

As he accepted the rosette stone, Ratner said, "We really do see the stone as the symbol that unites the past, present and future of Manhattan."

Developers said the mall's architects took

Developers said the mall's architects took special care to ensure that the project's design will be in character with the city's traditional architecture.

Plans indicate the mall will incorporate native limestone across a facade, along with a window treatment that will assume the storefront modularity of the city's established street scenes. The main entrance is designed as a two-story backdrop for the 100-foot-wide open courtyard off Third Street and Poyntz Avenue.

The mall will cover 33 acres in the eastern end of downtown Manhattan. Contracts have been signed for Dillard's and J.C. Penney Co. Inc. department stores to serve as the northand south-end anchor stores, respectively.

The enclosed structure will also contain space for 80 other retailers. A "food court," with seating for 500 patrons, is to provide space for fast-food and speciality-food eating establishments. Plans also provide space for three sit-down eating establishments.

Ratner said the name Manhattan Town Center was selected because the developers see the project as the center of the Manhattan community.

Challenger accident report critical of NASA's program

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — After a four-month investigation that shattered NASA's well-honed image of competence, the Challenger commission will tell President Reagan and the nation Monday that seven astronauts died in "an accident that didn't have to hap-

The 250-page report, delivered to Reagan over the weekend, is to be presented formally to the president by commission chairman William P. Rogers in an afternoon ceremony in the White House Rose Garden.

The report will say the explosion of the Challenger, 73 seconds after liftoff on Jan. 28, was triggered by a flame that found a path between segments of the right booster rocket and that such a catastrophic failure was foreshadowed by a long history of known but unsolved problems.

Commissioners and staff members who have discussed the findings on condition their names be withheld have said there will be no surprises in the study, which draws on 122,000 pages of documents and 160 interviews.

They say, however, it will be severely critical of NASA, which could proudly claim before the accident that it had not lost a single astronaut in 55 manned missions on four different vehicles involving 196 crew members. The only previous fatal spacecraft accident killed three astronauts on a launch pad in a 1967 Apollo test.

Of the Challenger accident, one commission source said, "We say it was an accident that didn't have to happen."

The 13 commissioners were shocked to learn in 13 public and closed hearings that the Challenger was launched over the strong objections from engineers of Morton Thiokol Inc., which builds the rocket boosters; that Morton Thiokol gave its approval under pressure from third-level NASA officials; and that launch control managers knew

New assistant, advisers to be named

Wefald announces plans for up to 10 positions

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's president-elect Jon Wefald has announced the creation of several positions. In a May 5 memo to faculty and administration, Wefald enclosed the announcement for an assistant to the president. Wefald said he would be recruiting internally to fill the position which opens July 1. Candidates must have a doctorate or an appropriate terminal degree to be considered. Application deadline was May 21, and the position was to be filled by July 1.

The assistant will act as liaison between the president and faculty and faculty organizations. Other responsibilities will include preparing background on academic issues, coordinating appointments and assisting Wefald in preparing for Kansas Board of Regents meetings.

Board of Regents meetings.

Wefald also announced the University's public relations efforts will be headed by a new vice president for institutional advance-

Wefald said the vice president will be responsible for all external relations of the University. This includes enrollment management, institutional development, alumni affairs and public relations matters. A screening committee has been formed to conduct a national search to fill this position. The deadline for applications is June 20. The position begins Aug. 15.

In an effort to increase enrollment at the University, up to eight new admissions counselors will be added to K-State's student recruitment program.

"The creation of the recruitment positions is designed to stabilize and increase enrollment." he said.

The counselors will be responsible for contacting and recruiting prospective students who are enrolled in high schools, and post-secondary institutions in Kansas and surrounding states.

The positions, which will be filled by Aug.

1, will require extensive travel and familiarity with K-State. A screening committee has also been formed for initial examination of applicants. Vice President for Educational and Student Services William Sutton is chairing the committee and said the new positions will benefit everyone involved with K-State.

"I firmly believe that any plan designed to first stabilize, then increase enrollment, should be supported by anyone who has interest in K-State," he said.

Sutton said if past recruitment plans have not been effective, efforts should be made to accept the changes designed to help K-State.

Denver struck by tornado; witnesses sight flying debris

By The Associated Press

DENVER - A tornado struck in the southeast part of the city Sunday, damaging a shopping center and injuring one man, while a rash of funnel clouds were sighted nearby, authorities said.

"Shingles, everything was flying into the clouds," said eyewitness Karen Hagan, a waitress at a bar in the Fairway shopping center. She said one man trying to cross a street when the twister hit was cut by flying shingles.

"At first, we kind of laughed at it," Hagan said, describing the high winds that pulled off shingles from the shopping center roof. "But then we saw how high it was flying, and everybody said, 'Oh my God, we're going to be dead,' because we'd never seen anything like it.

"It happened just like that," she

Jim Kaplan, a forecaster at the National Weather Service in Denver, said the indications were that "a tornado touched down along the Denver-Aurora border."

Shiite Moslem military fire on refugee camps

By The Associated Press

BEIRUT, Lebanon - Shiite Moslem militiamen pounded three Palestinian refugee camps with tank and mortar fire Sunday and the Palestinians appealed "for universal intervention to head off a massacre."

Angry exchanges between Shiite and Sunni religious leaders over the fighting sharpened animosities between the nation's two largest Moslem sects.

Police said seven people were kill-ed and 30 were wounded Sunday in the battle between the Shiite Amal militia and Palestinian guerrillas for control of the camps. That raised the known toll to 97 dead and 430 wounded since the latest round of the year-long war broke out May 19 at the shantytowns of Sabra, Chatilla and Bourj el-Barajneh.

Palestinian communiques claimed Amal and the predominantly Shiite 6th brigade of the Lebanese army were moving in reinforcements for a major offensive.

One communique said, "The incessant bombardment is leaving us no time to evacuate the wounded or bury the dead. Their (the Shiite) buildup shows they plan an allout attack. We appeal for universal in-tervention to head off a massacre."

The first reaction to the appeal came from Druse leader Walid Jumblatt, Amal's main ally in the civil war against Christian forces.

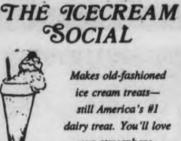

"The war over the camps should stop at once. Otherwise it will backfire on all of us," Jumblatt said in a statement. "If the current hostilities persist, then we shall all plunge into mini-civil wars in which we all shall be losers."

Palestine Liberation Organization chairman Yasser Arafat's Fatah guerrilla group issued an ultimatum to Amal to stop the bombardment.

"We hereby issue the first and last ultimatum to (Justice Minister Nabih) Berri's Zionist Amal gangs that we shall be compelled to undertake a massive retaliation with adequate deterrent weapons by 7 p.m. Sunday," Fatah's communique said.

Whitewater rafting offers many chills, thrills

By CHANGING TIMES The Kiplinger Magazine

"It's exciting!" "Exhilarating!"

"It will scare you!" These are the ways some adventurers recall their trip in a 12-foot rubber raft down West Virginia's New River, peppered with dips and turns in boiling white water rapids.

Growing numbers of people, including corporate groups, are turning to the sport of white water rafting to establish esprit de corps, beat stress, enjoy the wilderness and have fun. Part of the appeal may lie in the contrasts involved. Explains Jerry Richard, who has made the New River trip six times, "First there's the serenity of the flat water and then there's almost controlled panic when you find yourself looking danger in the face.

Some trips may be made in motorized rafts, while on others the guides pull the oars or the riders handle the paddles themselves. Although thrills await rafters on major waterways all over the U.S., some rafters don't stop with mere group trips on domestic rivers. They shoot for bigger thrills. Wildwater Expeditions, in Thurmond, W.Va., last year floated the idea of a nineday rafting expedition down raging jungle rivers of Costa Rica. Neither the danger nor the $1,600 price was a deterrent. It quickly filled up two rafts and had to stop taking applica-

With white water rafting there is always risk. How much depends on the particular geographic area, the quality of supervision and the type of equipment used. A sudden buck or dip can pitch you into swirling waters and dash you against a menacing outcrop, but proper emergency procedures make injuries rare.

Most people aren't looking for white water trips that are dangerous, exotic or expensive. A good river outfitter can tailor a trip to suit your personal tastes, no matter how simple or lavish.

Nighttime accommodations can be as primitive as an open campfire and bedroll on a rocky bank or as civilized as a lodge complete with jacuzzi and HBO. Your meals can range from bologna sandwiches and Kool-Aid to caviar and Dom Perignon.

Whatever your choice, whitewatering takes skill and knowledge. Unless you're a seasoned river runner and familiar with the waters you're traveling, Changing Times urges you to hire a professional guide to keep you from getting out of your depth, and to take the following steps:

Look for an established company that has been in business for years. Before signing on, get the names of previous rafters and ask them about their experiences.

-Pick a company that shows definite concern for safety. A conscientious outfitter holds briefings for rafters before they are allowed to set foot inside a raft. During these briefings, you'll learn how to use flotation gear and be drilled in proper emergency procedures. Your guides may join in with some of the normal high jinks on the river, but a reputable river guide won't allow horseplay to compromise safety.

-Ask prospective outfitters whether the rivers you'll be traveling are regulated by a federal or state permit process. It's better for beginners if they are because companies running such waterways must meet certain equipment standards as well as provide insurance coverage and have guides with a prescribed level of expertise. Unregulated rivers have no such requirements.

Fast ends for activist

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The White House said Wednesday that it would release emergency federal money to repair a shelter for the homeless, prompting activist Mitch Snyder to end a four-day hunger strike.

As the White House issued its statement, Sen. Mark Hatfield, R-Oregon, went to the shelter to give the news to Snyder, who was weak and pale after refusing food and water since the previous Sunday, May 25.

Joining hands in a circle with Snyder and 27 other fasters, Hatfield passed a cup of water to the activist.

Snyder began the hunger strike to pressure the Reagan administration to release $5 million it had promised March 16 for repairs to the crumbling, federally-owned building that the White House said should be turned over to the District of Columbia.

Earlier last week, when the White House said it was up to Congress to appropriate the money, Hatfield, who is chairman of the Senate Appropriations Committee, began negotiations with the administration to get a partial payment until Congress acts on the full amount.

Late Wednesday, White House deputy press secretary Peter Roussel said Secretary of Health and Human Services Otis Bowen had been directed to release $965,000 to the District of Columbia for the

After receiving the news, Snyder said "Our hope is that legislation will go through quickly...and on that basis we've decided to suspend the fasting."

The announcement came a few hours after the Rev. Jesse Jackson, touring the decrepit shelter near Capitol Hill, said he was mobilizing "massive direct action" across the country to bolster Snyder's cause.

'Our challenge is to mobilize the hungry and the homeless and begin to engage in massive direct action," Jackson said.

Slattery calls budget main issue in 3rd-term bid

By TOM SCHULTES

Declaring his bid for re-election based "not on promises but on my performance," Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Topeka, has announced his candidacy for a third term in Congress.

During his June 2 kickoff tour through northeast Kansas, Slattery conducted a press conference in front of the Riley County Courthouse, Fifth Street and Poyntz Avenue.

Slattery, 37, was first elected to Congress in 1982 after serving three terms in the Kansas House of Representatives. He also became the first Democrat to be elected speaker pro tem in the Kansas House. The majority of Slattery's combudget, due to his serving as a member of the House Budget Com-

"The debate over the budget dominates the action of the federal government," Slattery said. "This debate reflects the administration's attempt to redefine the role of the federal government.

"It also reflects the need to reconcile the political promises of the '60s and '70s with the economic realities of the '80s and '90s," Slattery said.

He said action taken by Congress, in exceeding the president's proposals, has resulted in reducing the deficit to less than half of the $300 billion projected one year ago. Slattery said the result has been in "in-ments concerned the national terest rates (which) have dropped significantly.'

He said the main difference between the House and Senate members of the committee is in where additional revenues would be appropriated. Slattery said House members favor allocating increases toward deficit reduction, while Senate members favor allocations toward an increase in the Pentagon's

"Both the House and the Senate are proposing levels of spending significantly less than what the president has recommended," Slattery said.

He said the resulting reduced interest rates have led to "lower interest rates (that) are saving Kansas farmers millions of dollars in lower operating costs; and are making it possible for many Kansans to buy their first homes.

He said "many tough choices" need to be made toward the Pentagon budget and resolution of the $150 billion trade deficit experienced between the United States and importing nations.

Slattery said the nation needs to realize the world is now a "global marketplace," and responses must be adapted to that situation. He said decisions must also be made as to which industries are needed for the nation's defense and survival of certain industries, such as automotive manufacturing and the steel in-

In regard to proposed aid to the Contras in Nicaragua, Slattery said recent publicity concerning misconduct and abuses by Contra leaders needs to be investigated before basing legislation on the charges.

Although Slattery has opposed funding the rebels in the past, he said he may have to re-examine that stand if the Sandinista government in Nicaragua rejects current peace in-

Slattery, who was born in the community of Good Intent in Atchison County, received his bachelor's degree in political science from Washburn University in 1970, and graduated from Washburn's School of Law in 1974.

Priddle resigns from state ag post

By JILL HUMMELS Campus Editor

TOPEKA - Following more than an hour of discussion, the State Board of Agriculture decided Saturday it would accept Secretary of Agriculture Harland Priddle's letter

The resignation will be effective when Priddle files as the lieutenant governor running mate of Secretary of State Jack Brier in Brier's bid for the Republican nomination for governor.

After a closed session meeting to discuss possible alternatives the board could take concerning his employment and his candidacy, Priddle said resignation was the cleanest move the board, which wishes to remain non-political, could

"It sends a proper signal. Any other signal left uneasiness. The resignation is clean for me, and I think is the right thing to do," said Priddle, a 55-year-old K-State alum-

Alternative measures the board could have taken were to grant Priddle a leave of absence without pay or a leave with compensation.

John Oswald, spokesman and former head of the board, called for Priddle's resignation after Brier announced June 1 he had picked Priddle as his running mate. Priddle, who joined Gov. John Carlin on a threeweek Kansas trade mission to China and the Far East, was in Shanghai when Brier made the announcement. but by Wednesday a department spokesman announced Priddle planned to resign.

Also during the early morning meeting, Don Jacka of Leavenworth was appointed acting secretary of agriculture until a permanent suc-cessor is appointed Oct. 1. Jacka, a 1977 K-State alumnus, said he was considering applying for the post.

Priddle said he and Brier intend to file as candidates for their respective positions either today or Tuesday, the last day to file for the Aug. 5 primary. The former banker and Air Force colonel from Hutchinson has been the state's agriculture secretary since 1982.

"We intend to be successful in this campaign," Priddle said in the Mill building across the street from the state Capitol. "I certainly will not remain a stranger in the future of agriculture.'

Brier said Priddle would head the new International Trade Development Division of the Department of Commerce.

Seven people have announced they are seeking the Republican nomination for governor. Candidates besides Brier are Gene Bicknell, House Speaker Mike Hayden, Larry Jones, Bill "Mack" McDonald. Richard Peckham and Barbara

The lake, fueled by heavy precipitation, has risen about 10 feet during the past four years, causing more than $175 million in property damage. Last month it reached its highest recorded level

Jerry Marshall, assistant superintendent at AMAX's processing plant, said the dike was breached by wind-whipped

He said the water was contained within an area of evaporation ponds, which AMAX uses to extract magnesium and minerals from the briny lake water, and did not halt operations at the plant

Federal inaction forces loan halt

Federal legislators have been virtually ignoring the problems of the Federal Housing Administration since October 1985 and as a result have forced the FHA into a stop-and-go type of operation.

The FHA's operating authority has expired and been renewed by Congress five times since its annual renewal authorization was not automatically approved last October. FHA officials say they expect to be halted from extending insurance loans at least a week since Congress will probably not vote for an extension until next week.

Meanwhile, about 50,000 home buyers or homeowners will either have to wait out the legislature's decision or seek conventional mortgage lenders for attaining mortgage insurance on their homes.

Although the inconvenience of a week's delay on a mortgage loan is usually not a financial disaster it can mean the difference between what interest rates a borrower will pay on the loan.

Congress's indifference to the FHA's operating authorization is creating even more of a problem in bureaucratic red tape. Homeowners must go back and forth applying to various mortgage loan lenders unsure of their FHA status.

It is an unnecessary hassle that could be easily cured if legislators could find time in their busy schedules to approve the FHA's operating authorization.

Devotion to Bible, politics conflict

Some things just don't mix.

Some things don't taste good together.

And then there is Pat Robertson and Jesse Jackson and their visions of being president of the United States.

Religious leaders having the final say on religion oriented issues dominating modern American politics simply doesn't mix.

The problem of religious leaders seeking the presidency appeared in the 1984 election with Jackson seeking the Democratic nomination, and now it appears Robertson, a TV evangelist who hosts "The 700 Club," is positioning himself for a run at the Republican nomination in 1986.

Everyone has the right to run for the presidency — once he or she is old enough. And, Robertson and Jackson meet that requirement, so they do and should have the constitutional right to campaign.

But this is not a matter of civil rights; it is a matter of a conflict of interest.

Contrary to the ignorance of some and often the confusion of the U.S. government, the United States is not a Christian nation.

Fleeing England for political freedom of religion was the reason this nation's first settlers came to this country.

Despite the word God being printed on the money of this nation and other blurred borders of religion and government, the United States is not a nation based on the belief in a God.

The religious background of presidential candidates has always been an important criterion for election in U.S. elections. This has been true since the 1700s and is true today with the fundamental beliefs of Ronald Reagan and the Baptist background of Jimmy Carter.

TIM FITZGERALD Collegian Columnist

Neither of these men, however, had previously devoted their lives to religious study and spreading the word of the Bible as have Robertson and Jackson.

It is hard to believe either man when he says he shall do his best to leave his devotion to the Bible on the White House doorstep so he may protect the doctrine of separation of church and state.

Let no one forget these men's lives are charged with the goal of spreading the word of Jesus Christ. Directly or indirectly, they shall uphold this dogma if they moved from the house of God to the houses of Congress.

But this conflict of interest is not the only problem which exists with a religious leader living in the White House. There is a violation of trust involved.

When leaders with such substantial followings as Robertson and Jackson change their focus from the Bible to the Constitution, so do

People who have trusted these men with their religious direction suddenly find themselves not hearing their leaders speak of sin and faith, but they find their chosen spiritual leaders speaking in terms of taxes and terrorism

Suddenly the names their leaders speak of change from John, Paul and Jesus to Ronald, Tip and Jimmy.

And worse yet, those who have donated their time and money to the advancement of religious beliefs are suddenly being misled into giving the same for the personal advancement of their leaders' poltical lives under the pretense of it being good for all.

Well, it isn't good for all. This country can be proud to say that not everyone holds the same religious beliefs and those who are in the minority are not legally persecuted for holding differing views of God or even the existence of God.

For those who don't believe there should be a separation between church and state, let a prediction be heard. When the religious beliefs of some are forced on others, many shall react in anger and some will be ashamed of the misuse of their religions.

Don't be fooled — Pat Robertson and Jesse Jackson do not seek the White House for the good of the United States, but for the good of themselves.

Somewhere on the road of wanting to preach the word of Jesus to the world, these men were engulfed by the power of having so many hang on every word they spoke.

And, now that power surge is out of control. These men have outgrown preaching in local churches and now speak in packed arenas and to millions of television viewers. They seek one more step in their addiction to attention and power.

Each wants to be the most powerful man on Earth — the president of the United States of America — and that simply doesn't mix.

THAT'S NOT FAIR, JOHNSON IS LETTING HIS FINGERS DO THE WALKING. Republican peace image may falter

It is hard to see how anything good will come from President Reagan's announcement that the United States will no longer be limited by the SALT II nuclear arms treaty with the Soviet Union. It takes the cap off the arms race at the moment when Congress and the Ameican public show signs of wearying of its pace. As far as relations with our allies are concerned, it is a real loser. And it is likely to be a political loser for the Republicans here at home as well.

In a damage-control operation, the administration sent Secretary of State George Shultz and Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger out to do "Meet the Press" and "Face the Nation" on June 1. They made reasoned cases for the decision. The treaty signed by Jimmy Carter and Leonid Brezhnev in 1979 had never been ratified, they said, and some of its terms had been violated already by the Russians. If the Russians demonstrate their sincerity by this autumn, the United States may yet agree to observe the limits.

But when all was said and done, viewers knew that a President who in more than five years has not come close to negotiating any new arms-control agreement had unilaterally decided to ignore numerical limits on nuclear missiles that the Russians and the United States had accepted and observed for the past seven years.

Canada's conservative foreign minister Joe Clark was shown saying on television, "This is a profoundly disturbing development which we had hoped would not occur."

DAVID BRODER Syndicated Columnist

And reports from the previous week's NATO meeting in Halifax were that the United States had no support among the 15 allied nations for this decision.

European countries which two years ago accepted a new generation of medium-range nuclear missiles on their territory, in return for Reagan's pledge to seek arms control, were vehement. Even Britain's Margaret Thatcher, the President's best buddy, took a walk on this one.

The attempted coverup of the Chernobyl nuclear power plant accident a few weeks ago had reminded Europe and the rest of the world of the Soviets' callousness. Now Reagan has taken them off the hook and handed them an issue they well know how to exploit.

Predictably, the Russians said that if the lid is off for the United States, they will accelerate their side of the nuclear arms race as well. The higher level of competition makes sense only if you believe that the United States will shovel in dollars faster than the Russians do rubles. Weinberger left no doubt Sunday that he believes we can — and should.

But Weinberger has not been persuasive to the majority of members of Congress of either party for at least two years. The budget resolutions passed by the House and Senate this year allow the Pentagon barely enough of an increase to cover inflation. Two weeks ago, 46 Senators signed a letter saying that spending for the Strategic Defense Initiative ("Star Wars") should rise only 3 percent next year — not the 74 percent Reagan had asked.

In the face of the budget deficit, the only way the President and Weinberger can blackjack Congress into raising the ante for new military hardware is to whip up a big war scare. And that is extremely dangerous to the health of the Republican Party, and its chances of keeping control of the Senate this year and of the White House in 1988.

A Gallup Poll released last week (but taken in early March) showed Republicans enjoyed the biggest lead over the Democrats as the party of prosperity in the 35-year history of the survey. By a 51-33 margin those polled said they thought Republicans were better bets to keep the nation's economy healthy.

But the same poll showed the parties at a virtual standoff (39 percent Republican; 36 percent, Democrat) on keeping the peace. For all his popularity, Reagan never has convinced a majority of the voters that he is a good bet for avoiding war.

Explosives experts defuse 200-pound bomb

LONDONDERRY, Northern Ireland — Army explosives experts Sunday defused a 200-pound bomb inside a hijacked van that was parked in the center of Londonderry, police said.

They said no warning was received that a bomb had been planted.

It was the first bomb incident in Londonderry, a stronghold of Irish nationalist resistance to British rule, since November, when a blast for which the Irish Republican Army claimed responsibility extensively damaged a shopping center. The outlawed IRA is fighting to unite Northern Ireland with the Irish Republic.

Kansas residents support Florida execution

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Residents of a northwest Kansas community where Daniel Remeta and three others went on a bloody rampage in February 1985 say Gov. John Carlin should not prevent Remeta from being executed in Florida.

in Ocala, Fla. Remeta already has been sentenced to five life terms in Kansas for the kidnapping and murder of two men and the murder of another in the final day of a rampage which allegedly left victims in Florida, Texas, Arkansas and Kansas. Survivors of the three men and others in Colby, Kan., said Saturday in telephone interviews with The Kansas City Star that Carlin — who has four times vetoed capital punishment bills — should not try to bring Remeta back to Kansas to spend the rest of his life in prison.

"Is Carlin going to let them put him to death? I hope so," said Melda Moore, whose husband Glenn was one of the three Kansans killed in the spree. "That's where he needs to be. Just keep him down there (in Florida), and let them kill him.

Get him out of the way."

After Remeta's sentencing last week, Florida authorities vowed to keep him on death row rather than return him to Kansas.

Carlin has not commented on Florida plans to keep Remeta, which are based on a policy of not returning death-row inmates to states where they face lesser sentences. "I think the majority of the people out here would like to see the death penalty brought back to Kansas," Thomas County sheriff's Capt. Scott Ekberg said. "Maybe they're old fashioned, but I think they feel it should be an eye for an eye.

"Personally, I think that Danny Remeta deserves the death penalty," he added.
"And I think that justice was served in Florida."

SKYKOMISH, Wash. — Thirty-one men and women in caps and gowns showed up for Skykomish High School's annual commencement exercises, but none of them received diplomas.

None of the school's 96 students was a senior, so rather than end the school year on a sour note, school superintendent Frank Sarno invited Skykomish graduates to relive graduation day a second time Friday.

The re-graduates of this sparsely populated hamlet, about 100 miles east of Seattle, got into the spirit of things. Said Kathy Hibbs, 29, Class of 1975: "I was married and seven months pregnant the first time around. This time I get to have some fun."

Bill Barringer, the town marshal, said he showed up to keep things from getting out of hand. "I heard there's a kegger (beer party) going on afterwards but that's still under investigation," he said.

There won't be any need for fill-in graduates in the immediate future. "Next year will be a really big class; there will be 12 or 14," Sarno said.

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — About 50 anti-abortion protesters picketed Saturday in front of a Kansas City hotel where members of the National Abortion Federation gathered for their annual convention.

Businesswoman named GOP running mate

TOPEKA — Barbara Pomeroy, an instructor at Wichita State University seeking the Republican nomination for governor, has chosen Barbara Hale, a Wichita businesswoman, as her lieutenant governor running mate, sources said Sunday.

Sources told The Associated Press that Pomeroy would introduce Hale as her running mate when the pair files for the Aug. 5 primary election on Tuesday morning in the secretary of state's office.

Pomeroy, 47, was a virtual unknown in Kansas political circles when she launched her bid last March to become the first woman in state history to seek the governor nomination of a major party.

In Hale, she has chosen another unknown quantity in state politics. Owner of Meter Engineering, Hale's name was not recognized by any Sedgwick County Republican officials contacted Sunday and is not active in the state party. Her company, Meter Engineering Inc. of Wichita, calibrates oil field meters and equipment and reportedly has clients in several states.

Neither Hale nor Pomeroy could be reached Sunday for comment.

Area band expands horizons with new drummer, album

By TODD NIGHSWONGER Arts and Entertainment Editor

Being a three-person rock band was not in the original plans for the group Steve, Bob and Rich. Steve Phillips, Bob Walkenhorst and Rich Ruth formed their band three years ago with the intention of having four members. But a drummer was never found who fit in, leaving the duties to Walkenhorst. We just put together the best bland we could which was the three of us," Walkenhorst said Saturday night before an Arts in the Park perrmance in City Park, "At that time, we didn't really know what the course of the band was going to be."

Steve. Bob and Rich set out as a regional band not knowing what to expect. What they got was instant success. "It caught on a little faster regionally than we expected," Walkenhorst said.

Along with Phillips on guitar and Ruth on bass, the band began to build its own identity. By performing original music, with many of the songs' lyrics telling a story, the Kansas City-based trio emerged as one of the most popular bands in the area.

The biggest drawing card for the band was Walkenhorst. As lead vocalist for most of the songs, he was able to belt out the tunes while playing a small drum set standing up.

Before we were together a year, we pretty much hit the plateau of what a regional band can do.'

year - for the band to mature as much as it could on a regional level. "Before we were together a year, we pretty much hit the plateau of what a regional band can do," Walkenhorst said.

It was their goal from the start to take the band as far as it could go. That meant branching out from its regional connections.

"Ever since the band has been together, we knew it was our goal to write our own songs and put out a nationally released record," Walkenhorst said.

To do that, the band members knew it was time to find a musician who could serve strictly as the drummer. Six months ago, Pat Tomak joined the group as the fourth "That was our hook to start out member of Steve, Bob and Rich. This with," said Phillips, who also sings. allowed Walkenhorst to concentrate

"Our reason for adding a drummer was to free me up a little bit and get me out front where I can deliver the tunes the way they needed to be delivered," he said.

The last several months have been a form of metamorphosis from a regional to a national band. In March and April, the band recorded its first album on a major record label -Mercury/PolyGram - with a July 15

The biggest change came with the the name Steve, Bob and Rich no longer could be used. After a long search, the band decided on The Rainmakers.

"We just couldn't find a name that everybody agreed on," Phillips said. "As a last resort, we were looking through a thesaurus for ideas. Rainmakers wasn't actually in there, but we extracted it from the thesaurus."

While the band members realize the new name will take some getting use to for the regional fans, it won't be a problem on the national level, Walkenhorst said.

"The number of people who know the band as Steve, Bob and Rich is much less than the number of people who have never heard of us," he said. "The record will be released in places we've never played. It'll be like starting over."

When I heard that local favorites Steve, Bob and Rich were adding a drummer, it was news not taken

Music Review

As one who has enjoyed many performances by the trio from Kansas City, I went with apprehension Saturday night to hear the band play with new drummer Pat Tomak for an Arts in the Park performance in City Park.

The group's claim to fame throughout the region was the personalities of the three original members - guitarist Steve Phillips, lead singer and drummer Bob Walkenhorst and bassist Rich Ruth.

With Walkenhorst playing drums standing up, i.e. the Stray Cats, com-bined with the innovative lyrics of original songs, the members' individual personalities formed a unique trio. And the novelty of the group quickly spread throughout the region.

How in the world, then, could Steve, Bob and Rich add a fourth member and still have that unique quality? The name of the band, after all, denotes just three members.

Like many fans, I had selfish motives for wanting the band to stay the way it was. It was a band fans in the region could identify with.

But in all fairness, a band has to be able to reach its goals, and the main goal for Steve, Bob and Rich has been to go national. Enter Tomak on - The Rainmakers.

During Saturday night's teen dance performance, the band played a little more than two hours before a crowd of nearly 500, many of whom had never heard the band before.

Other than a loud buzzing on one song (in which the band did an admirable job of keeping the beat), the quality of the music was as good as ever. However, I do believe that the band is more effective inside where the audience can get a closer view.

I really went to the concert, though, to check out the band with its new drummer.

Because Walkenhorst provided a basic beat on a basic set when he was the drummer, Tomak didn't have big shoes to fill, musically speaking. In fact, Tomak's set contains just five drums and five cymbals, a far cry from the size most rock drummers

By adding a drummer to the group, Walkenhorst is now able to concentrate on singing while providing rhythm guitar on several numbers. Although Walkenhorst's vocals never have lacked vitality, his voice is even more energetic now.

Some of the novelty of Steve, Bob and Rich may be gone, but the quality and personality of the group have not waned. Even though it has added a fourth member and will soon change its name, the band will always have a strong local following.

So why not let the rest of the country get in on a little bit of what this area has enjoyed for the last three years?

Pat Tomak, the new drummer for Steve, Bob and Rich, plays with the band during its concert Saturday evening at Clty Park. Tomak joined the band after the group decided to record an album to be released nationally.

Danny and the Juniors 'hop' it up with concert

By JOLA MURPHY Staff Writer

A few thousand "hopping" fans, young and old, gathered for the opening concert of the summer's Arts in the Park series at City Park Friday night to dance and sing with Danny and the Juniors.

"Kids are doing it. The adults are doing it. It's just great fun for everyone," Jim Pearson, assistant city manager, said. "Arts in the Park drags them in from all over. If people see a great performance like this one, they keep coming back. There are kids out here who have never even heard of Danny and the Juniors and they're having a great time. There are four generations of people out here just living it up."

The group's stage performance was filled with dancing, impressions and comedy.

"I think I like this music because it makes you perspire a lot," said 11-year-old John Cukjati. "This music really makes me want to dance."

The nationally known rock group received most of its recognition when it recorded the song "At the Hop," which climbed to the top of the national pop music charts in 1957.

After that hit, the group continued its success with such songs as "Rock and Roll is Here to Stay,' "Sometimes," "Twistin' U.S.A."

and "Pony Express." Eleven recordings by Danny and the Juniors hit the pop music charts in the rock 'n' roll era.

Almost 30 years have passed since their first big hit. In that time, their record sales have surpassed 25 million. The group now performs at small concerts and hot spots throughout the world. They have also been seen in movies and on several television performances such as "Dick Clark's American Bandstand" and "Twenty Years of Rock 'n'

The group's performance Friday lasted more than an hour. After one encore and two versions of "At the Hop," the nostalgia ended for the exhausted crowd.

"I love this music," Travis Bowers, Fort Riley, said. "These guys really seem to have it all together up there. I think they should have more performances like this one during the summer."

About the only complaint from the crowd was a lack of seating area due to the large number in attendance. "They could use a little more seating out here," Bowers said. The group consists of three instrumentalists and three original members of Danny and the Juniors.

"We never get tired of playing these small towns," lead singer Bill Carlucci said. "The crowds all react differently and they're always new."

The Kansas Board of Regents recently approved several fee increases for K-State students. During their May 15 meeting, the Regents authorized the University to increase transcript fees and the student health fee. The Regents also approved a tuition increase which will become effective the fall of 1987.

Tom Rawson, the Regents' director of planning and budget, said the tuition increase was implemented in keeping with an agreement with the Kansas Legislature. It was agreed that in-state students pay 25 percent of the cost of higher education in Regents institutions, while the state and other sources pay 75 percent. The tuition increase is intended to maintain this ratio.

Tuition for full-time resident undergraduates increases from $520 for 1986 to $535 for 1987; full-time resident graduates, $580 to $595; fulltime non-resident undergraduates, $1,475 to $1,620; and full-time nonresident graduates, $1,535 to $1,680.

Tuition at the College of Veterinary Medicine will also increase in the fall of 1987. For residents, it will go from $900 to $1,125, and for non-residents, from $2,700 to $3,375. These are increases of 25 percent. James Coffman, dean of the College of Veterinary Medicine, could not be reached for

All seven Regents institutions will have tuition increases. These include K-State, the University of Kansas, Wichita State University, Fort Hays State University, Emporia State University, Pittsburgh State University and the Kansas Technical Institute. Exact fee increases vary from school to school, with KU and WSU having the same increases as

The Regents also approved an increase in transcript costs. Effective July 1, the cost of obtaining an official transcript will go from $1 to $2. Steve Hall, assistant registrar, said the increase was requested because of the rising costs of paper and postage. Hall estimates that 70,000 transcripts are requested each year, and that "the increase will not offset the cost of producing these completely, but it will help."

The student health fee will increase from $55 to $60, effective this fall. Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene Student Health Center, said this is the first increase in the fee since 1982.

"The $5 increase is not significant," Tout said. "It isn't enough, but we'll take it."

Tout said a provision to adjust the health fee yearly or at two- or threeyear intervals would be helpful due to the time it takes to get an increase approved. Tout began working on an increase in 1983, and originally requested a $30 increase over a threeyear period.

In other action, the Regents renamed three bond fees, effective this fall. The K-State Union Annex II Bond Fee and the Recreational Building Bonds Fee will become the Refunding Bonds fee, under the classification Student Fee Revenue Bonds. The Coliseum Bonds fee will be categorized under the classification Student Fee Revenue Bonds.

Additionally, the current Coliseum Bonds Fee will be reduced by $4.25 per semester per full-time students The fee will go from $20.75 to $16.50.

Douglas Ackley, head of cashiers and loans in the controller's office, said the decrease is the result of the refinancing of several bonds. The $4.25 was the amount for the stadium bond fee included in the Coliseum Bond. Ackley said the stadium bond has enough money in it, hence the

FFA group hears Wefald discuss agriculture future

By JILL HUMMELS Campus Editor

Agriculture is the single most important industry in the United States, Jon Welfald, K-State's president-elect, told an audience of 800 state members of Future Farmers of America at the Friday night session of the organization's 58th annual convention.

"We've forgotten about the importance of ag and the importance of rural America," said Wefald, who has served as state commissioner of agriculture in Minnesota. "We have to keep in mind that our farmers and ranchers have produced an unlimited amount of food and fiber to make this the greatest country in the America's farmers, who account for approximately 2 percent of the country's population, produce enough to ensure the United States is the best fed nation in the world and feed another 20 percent of the earth's population, he said.

"Ag is our lifeblood and represents our greatest source of income and wealth," Wefald said. Agriculture will be responsible for restoring the U.S. balance of trade and putting the United States back at full employment, he said

Wefald said the next 10 years will be years to watch in agriculture-related careers.

'1986 to 1996 represents the best decade that one can go into ag. Rural America will recover. Ag will recover; the jobs are there. Things are bottoming out now. Things are starting to look better. The jobs are there...and there are going to be more jobs," Wefald said. "In 1986, agriculture is the largest industry in Kansas, and people ought to remember that."

He complimented the College of Agriculture for its advancements in research that have "come through for the state," referring to wheat strains developed by the college in recent years which will have an impact in the future.

Wefald also stressed the importance of obtaining post-secondary education, whether at K-State or a community college

"You will best serve yourself by getting the maximum education.... You have to think big. You have to have expectations for yourself. You have to think you can do it. In studying American history, I found that one person can make a difference," he said.

Wefald also got an early start on student recruitment at the convention by stressing many of the achievements of the University and the people associated with it. He even predicted K-State would win at least two football games in Wefald will assume the K-State presidency July 1.

Philippines awaits possible election

Aquino might be tiring of presidency pose to keep them in office for six

By The Associated Press

MANILA, Philippines - President Corazon Aquino was quoted as saying in an interview Sunday that if the constitution-writing commission she appointed two weeks ago calls for a new presidential election, she will not run.

The Sunday Inquirer Magazine quoted Aquino as replying to a question as to whether she would run, "I won't be a part of that anymore. I think I'm just meant for snap elections.

The president also was quoted as saying some of her five children are hoping that the 48-member commission will call for a new elections "so I can get out of here quickly."

According to the newspaper, Aquino also conceded that uneasiness exists between her and two administration members who are former allies of ousted President Ferdinand Marcos.

When Marcos scheduled special presidential elections for Feb. 7, Aquino reluctantly agreed to run. Politicians, business and religious leaders insisted that only she could beat Marcos because of her stature as the widow of assassinated opposition leader Benigno Aquino. She maintained she was a housewife who knew nothing about running a government.

Marcos claimed he won the fraud-tainted election and was proclaimed winner by the now-abolished National Assembly he controlled. Aguino said she won the election and that Marcos cheated her.

Backed by a military-civilian revolt, she was sworn into office Feb. 25. Marcos fled the country for exile in Hawaii a day later, ending 20 years as president.

Some members of the constitutional commission propose that all offices, including the presidency, should be up for election after the new charter is ratified in a plebiscite.

Other members, arguing that Aquino and Vice President Salvador Laurel really won the election, pro-

Dylan spends 4 years worshiping with Jews

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - Reclusive folk-pop superstar Bob Dylan, a Jew who flirted with fundamental Christianity in the late 1970s, has spent some of the last four years living and worshiping with ultra-orthodox Hasidic Jews, a newspaper reported Sunday.

Members of Brooklyn's Lubavitch community told the Daily News that Dylan, 45, has been taking instruction from Talmudic scholars.

His latest visit was during Passover, and he is expected to return when he comes to New York for a concert in Madison Square Garden on July 17, community members told the News.

Dylan declines to discuss his religious activities.

"He is a very private person and we respect his wishes to remain so," said Rabbi Yehuda Krinsky, spokesman for the Lubavitch community

Law may help AIDS victims

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - Justice Department lawyers have tentatively concluded that people with AIDS are handicapped individuals entitled to protection under federal civil rights laws, according to a report published

A confidential legal opinion drafted by lawyers in the civil rights division says that people with acquired immune deficiency symdrome meet the legal definition because they have a physical impairment that substantially limits "major life activity," The New York Times reported.

The law also covers people who are regarded as having such an impairment, even if they don't. For that reason, the opinion suggests that people with antibodies to the AIDS virus but no symptoms of the disease may be protected by the law as well. Under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, it is illegal for federal agencies and recipients of federal money to discriminate against handicapped people who are otherwise qualified for a particular job, service or

Thus the Justice Department's final position on the issue will have wide implications for employers, schools, hospitals and other entities that receive federal money. Senior officials told the Times there was little disagreement within the Justice Department over the tentative con-

People with AIDS and its related syndromes have been dismissed from jobs, denied medical care and barred from public schools.

"Because of public hysteria connected with the disease, persons with AIDS frequently become societal pariahs, irrationally ostracized by their communities because of medically baseless fears of contagion and people's historical fear of nion said.

"This treatment of persons with AIDS, grounded in irrational public prejudices, is precisely one of the kinds of behaviors that led to the enactment of the Rehabilitation Act." it said.

Homosexual rights groups have sought a declaration that people with AIDS are covered by the 1973 law. Homosexual and bisexual men account for 73 percent of the reported AIDS cases, according to the Public Health Service.

The opinion cautioned that every case of discrimination would not be a violation of the law, because a person who poses a genuine threat to the health of others may, for that reason, be unqualified for a particular job or benefit. Such cases, however, should be rare because "AIDS is not readily communicable, and not spread by casual contact," the opinion said.

Cuban officer released by Castro 25 years after Bay of Pigs conflict

By The Associated Press

HOMESTEAD, Fla. - A highranking Cuban officer imprisoned for his part in the Bay of Pigs invasion 25 years ago was reunited with his family Sunday after being released by Cuban President Fidel Castro and flown to Florida.

"Sometimes there aren't words to express how one feels," Ricardo Montero Duque said moments after an emotional greeting by relatives at Homestead Air Force Base. "I'm very grateful to the people and the government of the United States. I'm very happy to be here."

Montero, 60, freed five years before the end of his sentence, was met by his Cuban wife, Ester Montero, who now lives in New Jersey; his 80-year-old mother, Bernardina Duque de Montero of Miami; and two brothers, also of Miami.

Montero, who had been told Thursday he was being freed, was released at 6 a.m. EDT Sunday from the Combinado del Este prison, where he had been held for 25 years. He arrived at the air base south of Miami five hours later.

'I was very happy that I was going to be reunited with my family and come to a free land," the gray-haired, healthy-looking Montero said he recalled thinking after being told

He said he did not know why Castro released him.

Immediately after the reunion, Montero called U.S. Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., who on Wednesday sent his foreign policy adviser, Gregory Craig, to Havana to escort Montero to the United States.

Montero thanked Kennedy, who was vacationing at the family's retreat in Hyannisport, Mass., for his

"I want to welcome you to freedom," Kennedy told Montero, according to the senator's spokesman, Bob Mann. "...I want you to know that we shall continue all efforts to attain the release of all political prisoners as well as the last Bay of Pigs prisoner."

Kennedy's brother John was president when the Bay of Pigs invasion took place, wrote two letters to Castro in 1985 pressing for Montero's

Cuban officials sent word several days ago that they were prepared to free Montero, Kennedy aides said. So far as is known, he was one of two Bay of Pigs prisoners still being held, Montero reportedly was held because he had been a major in dictator Fulgencia Batista's army. He also was not released earlier because he refused to sign a confession and would not wear a prisoner's uniform, the aides said.

Montero, reported to be a battalion commander for the 1,400-member rebel force that failed in its April 17, 1961, invasion of the island, was sentenced to a 30-year term in September 1961.

He was among nine of about 1,200 CIA-trained Cuban exiles that Castro took prisoner and would not release. The other 1,200 were released 22 months later in exchange for $53 million in food and medical supplies.

Of the other eight, one died in prison, six were later freed and one, Ramon Conte Hernandez, remains in prison. Kennedy also wrote to Cuban officials last week requesting Conte's

Wildcat jumpers claim gold at NCAA track championship

By TONY CARBAJO

City/Recreation Editor Kenny Harrison and Rita Graves continued their dominance in their respective field events as each brought home a National Collegiate Athletic - Association Outdoor Track and Field Championships gold medal

this weekend from Indianapolis, Ind. Harrison leaped a lifetime best and K-State record distance of 56-0 on his final attempt in the triple jump competition and catapulted into the lead from the fourth place spot he was previously holding. The jump was also the best collegiate effort in the nation this year.

Harrison's attempt to take the double — the long jump and triple jump titles - vanished on Friday when he attained a sixth-place finish in the long jump. He won the NCAA Indoor long jump championship earlier this year also on the last jump.

"Oh yeah, Kenny was a little disappointed (with the long jump), Coach Steve Miller said. "We came into the meet thinking the long jump was the best of the two events for

"We thought he had an awfully good chance to win the long jump," Miller continued. "He has been super consistent in the long jump all year."

"It felt great to win the triple jump," Harrison said. "After finishing sixth in the long jump, I wanted to come back and prove myself in the triple. I feel great Graves finally won an NCAA championship in the high jump after being a runner-up for three years. Graves, along with two other jumpers, cleared the bar at 6-2. She took the title by virtue of missing fewer jumps at the lower heights.

The jump equalled a personal best for Graves who is a seven-time All-American.

"Rita is probably the most underrated...it is unfortunate that Rita doesn't get more recognition," Miller said. "She is another athlete who's always super consistent. She just did her thing.

"She has been a runner-up three times before so this is kind of a fairy tale ending to her senior year."

Two other K-State performers also placed in events over the weekend. Felicia Carpenter broke her own school record in the women's triple sixth-place overall finish.

Chris Vanatta also earned All-America honors for her sixth-place finish in the women's 5,000-meter run. Vanatta turned in a time of

One person missing for K-State was Jacque Struckhoff who qualified for an unprecedented four distance events. Struckhoff qualified for the 1,500, 3,000, 5,000 and 10,000-meter runs but did not participate because of a leg injury.

Struckhoff was diagnosed as having a stress fracture in the neck of jump, as she leaped 42-7 and took a her left femur bone. She will be out an estimated six to eight weeks during which time she will undergo a rehabilitation program.

"It is easy to say would of, could of and should of," Miller said. "It is a safe assumption to say if we had Jacque we would have placed higher. But, you have to dance with who you

Coleman loses appeal, seeks transfer

By TONY CARBAJO

City/Recreation Editor K-State's first-year phenomenon,

Norris Coleman, was again ruled ineligible to play for K-State by the National Collegiate Athletic Association's Sub-Committee for Eligibility on May 20. The subcommittee was the last step in Coleman's appeal process to the NCAA.

The sub-committee upheld an earlier ruling made April 22 which stated Coleman, 24, would not be eligible for competition at K-State until Feb. 27, 1987. That ruling corresponds with the time Coleman competed at K-State during the 1985-86 season while being ineligi-

Coleman did not participate in the Wildcats' last two contests after the NCAA Administrative Committee ruled the former Army sergeant was not a "2.0 qualifier" following graduation from Paxon Senior High School in Jacksonville, Fla., in 1979 and so was unable to receive financial aid to a Division I school.

The latest ruling makes Coleman immediately eligible at another university, should he transfer, and gives last season's highest national scoring freshman three years of playing time remaining. The ruling gives Coleman the rights of a regular Division I recruit. He can make five official campus visits and is under the same guidelines of a normal recruiting visit. Upon losing the initial decision to the administrative committee, Coleman retained the services of Topeka lawyer and K-State alumnus Jeff Schemmel. Schemmel, after the sub-committee's decision, said the two "are ruling nothing out" and are discussing all options available to Coleman. In the meantime, Coleman has taken his maximum allowed recruiting visits. The First Team All-Big Eight selection and the league's Newcomer of the Year has made visits to Maryland, Virginia, Jacksonville, Kentucky and Louisiana State in the last 12 days.

Coleman said if he leaves K-State, which he indicated he did not want to do unless he was not allowed to play immediately next season, he would seek to play in a more publicized market in the eastern section of the country, preferably the Southeast.

Schemmel and Coleman, however, have not ruled out the possibility of taking legal action to restore Coleman's eligibility immediately next season at K-State.

"No, (we havn't ruled out legal action)," Schemmel said. "(Norris) has narrowed it to two options (transfer or take legal action). If he stays at K-State we plan to file a lawsuit."

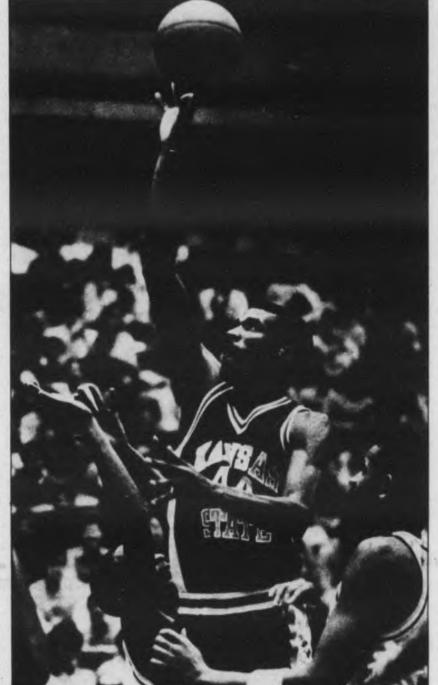

Schemmel would not speculate which way Coleman was leaning after taking his five visits to prospective schools, or which school he particularly liked above the others.

"I couldn't tell you (which way he is leaning)," Schemmel said. "He likes K-State a lot. If everything was equal he would stay. But the ruling invites him to leave. He is going to take his five visits."

If Coleman took the legal route, Schemmel said, he would, in essence, file a suit against K-State and the NCAA to become eligible at K-State for the entire season. The two would first try an obtain a temporary restraining order and later seek an injunction to make the ruling permanent.

"Once you get him to court it would be Norris Coleman's views. He should not be denied to play at K-State because it was not Norris Coleman's fault (he was certified by his high school and K-State)," Schemmel said.

A hearing, if Coleman and Schemmel elected to pursue such a path, would be heard in this jurisdiction — Manhattan, Topeka or Kansas City — according to Schemmel. Schemmel also said should Norris decide he would like to remain at K-State, his chances would be "very, very good" of successfully winning a lawsuit.

Norris Coleman, K-State's star forward, is presently still ineligible to play for the Wildcats. Since the NCAA ruling on May 20, Coleman is looking at possibilities of legal action to reinstate his eligibility or finding a different school outside the Big Eight.

Minnesota shuts down Royals in 5-2 victory

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - On paper, it looked like a mismatch. And it was. But not the way the paper said.

Mark Portugal, with an earned run average of 6.54 and only two career victories, threw "the best change-up of my life" Sunday and outdueled Cy Young winner Bret Saberhagen to lead the Minnesota Twins to a 5-2 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

"I knew I had good stuff as soon as I went out there, and I just kept trying to throw strikes," said Portugal, 2-6. Until running into trouble in the seventh and getting relief help from Frank Pastore, Portugal did not let a runner past first base.

The 23-year-old right-hander gave up three hits and struck out a career-ting ahead and going for strikeouts with it," he said. "It set up my fastball really well. They were looking for off-speed stuff, and I'd come in with the fastball. I guess I was aiming the ball in the seventh. (Manager) Ray Miller had to make the decision he felt was best for the club, and evidently it was the right decision."

The move by Miller turned out to be perfect. Pastore gave up only one hit the rest of the way.

"A game like this can do wonders for the confidence of a young kid like that." he said. "If I take him out and Pastore does the job, then everybody is congratulating him on what a great game he threw and he gets a good shot of confidence. If I leave him in and we get beat, then all his good pitching and all his good work

Lendl wins French title

By The Associated Press

PARIS - Ivan Lendl powered his way to his second French Open men's singles crown Sunday, halting the amazing run of Sweden's Mikael Pernfors 6-3, 6-2, 6-4.

It was Lendl's third Grand Slam singles crown and he did it his way, controlling the match with his powerful groundstrokes and the tempo with his tactics.

Celtics claim 16th NBA title

By The Associated Press

BOSTON - The no-nonsense Boston Celtics could have spared Houston 48 minutes of agony. They knew before Sunday's game that they would be NBA champions when it was over.

"We knew it wasn't going to be a one-point victory or a five-point victory. We knew before the game we were going to blow them out," guard Jerry Sichting said after the Celtics buried the Rockets 114-97 for Boston's 16th title.

"I knew the way we were going to approach this game there was no way they were going to be in the ballgame," he added. "We were very upset with what happened in Houston."

"We listened to a lot of the talk (about Thursday night's game) and we responded very well to the talk," Celtics' guard Dennis Johnson said.

"We felt worse after the game than any (newspaper) article made us feel," Sichting said. "There wasn't the cutting-up that usually goes with practice." That seriousness showed from the opening tap, won by the Celtics.

"There was really no doubt we were going to come out and take command of this game early," said McHale, who had 29 points and 10 rebounds and played excellent defense on Houston's Ralph Sampson. 'There was a fire in everybody's

After the victory, that fire was still burning in the eyes of Bill Walton, who captured his first NBA title since leading Portland to the title in 1977 before his career was reduced to a series of injuries.

"So much work, so much effort, so much tension for us, and to have it all come true," Walton said. "Unbelievable. I never thought it would happen again."

Bird earns MVP honor

TO SEE THE

FINISHED PROJECT

By The Associated Press

BOSTON - Larry Bird of the Boston Celtics has a reputation for playing hard every game, yet he said Sunday's NBA title clincher against the Houston Rockets was something special, even for him.

"I've been pumped up before, maybe never more than in the second game of this series, but I think this takes the cake," he said after the Celtics beat the Rockets 114-97 to win the seven-game series four games to two. "I definitely was ready to play today."

Despite the sweltering conditions in ancient, non-air-conditioned Boston Garden, Bird played 46 minutes, scored 29 points, grabbed 11 rebounds and handed off 12 assists. He hit eight of 17 field goal attempts, including a couple of three-point bombs, 11 of 12 free throws, and also stole the ball three times.

For the six games, he averaged 24 points, 9.7 rebounds and 9.5 assists, a performance that earned him the

Vaught signs juco recruits

By TONY CARBAJO City/Recreation Editor

K-State baseball coach Gary Vaught continued to hit the junior college ranks in his search of players to help rebuild the Wildcat baseball team during this year's recruiting season.

Vaught has signed a total of 10 players thus far to letters of intent, all hailing from junior college programs. As he did last season, Vaught continued to recruit players from his former home state of Oklahoma as five of his signees hail from schools in the Sooner state.

Included in the group are three pitchers, three infielders, three outfielders and a catcher. The signees include:

Jeff Hulse, catcher, hit .472 as a freshman and .320 this past season for Northeast Oklahoma A&M Junior College. Hulse set a school record for RBI and was an All-Conference choice this year.

Scott Spangenberg, shortstop, hit .390 this season with 11 home runs and 57 RBI. Spangenberg also hails from Northeast Oklahoma A&M Juco.

David Santa Cruz Jr., shortstopthird base, posted a .294 batting average this season as he led Barton County in runs scored, 43, and home runs, nine. Santa Cruz posted a .566 slugging percentage.

Zack Kimbell, right-handed pitcher, posted an 8-3 record with a 2.31 ERA this past season for Labette (Okla.) Community College. Kimbell hails from Yates Center.

David Chadd, first basedesignated hitter, hit .362 last season at Barton County to rank second on the team in that category. Chadd was also second in RBIs with 38. He also hit eight home runs and posted a .616 slugging percentage. Chadd is a native of Wichita.

Kent Gleason, outfielder, led Barton County with a .373 batting average while racking up 21 RBIs. Gleason also hails from Wichita.

Rusty Ringgenberg, outfielder, played last season at Kansas City Community College after graduating from Manhattan High School. He was an American Legion MVP at Manhattan in 1984 and 1985. Ringgenberg was also an All-State football selection for the Indians.

Scott Turner, outfielder, hit .342 last season as a freshman at Allen County Community College. Turner was a three-sport letterwinner at Manhattan High where he quarterbacked the Indians his junior and senior campaigns. Turner captured the the batting trophy for the highest American Legion team batting average in pitched this past season for Labette Community College. He finished season with a 5-3 record and a 3.58 ERA and throws in the high 80s.

Darryl Rowley, left-handed pitcher, posted a 9-4 record with a 2.20 ERA at Northeastern Oklahoma A&M last season. He led the team in victories while averaging one strikeout per inning. Rowley was selected in the winter baseball draft by the Philadelphia Phillies but elected not to sign. Rowley is a native of Saskatchewan, Canada, where he was selected the 1984 Player of the Year.

Vaught said he feels good about this year's recruiting class, especially in the fact that K-State beat out some quality teams for a number of the players.

"I feel we filled a lot of holes that we needed to fill," Vaught said. "We are trying to establish ourselves. Last season we came up a little short on the W's and L's . It is an experience I don't ever want to go through again."

One area that Vaught believed did not meet expectations last season was his pitching staff. He said the team has added some throwers who should "plug some Vaught indicated he planned on adding a couple more players to this year's class but was awaiting conformation before releasing their names.

Shuttle

nothing of the protests. the commission Indeed, discovered from a tell-tale paper trail that the booster rocket joints had been a concern since the early 1970s - long before the first shuttle was launched in 1981. The panel uncovered evidence that in 10 of the 24 previous shuttle flights that gases had found a way through booster rocket seals called O-rings. The report demands that NASA redesign the rocket and recommends that it be tested full-size, preferably in a vertical position, to more precisely duplicate actual launch stresses. Previous designs have been tested in 10-inch scale models and in full-scale models on horizontal stands.

Only hours before the Challenger was launched, the temperature on Kennedy Space Center launch pad 39B was 24 degrees, colder by far than any overnight temperature on a previous launch. Allan McDonald and his fellow Morton Thiokol engineers feared the cold would cause the quarter-inch diameter seals to lose resilience and their ability to seal gaps that form when the rocket is fired.

The commission report will say that probably happened. The scenario, from a frame-by-frame study of films, showed a puff of smoke from the region of the joint between the bottom two segments of the booster rocket in the first halfsecond of ignition.

Just before the one-minute mark, when the shuttle had just cleared a zone of maximum stress, the tongue of flame lashed out from the same area as the smoke and caused the bottom of the booster rocket to break loose from its attachment to the shuttie fuel tank. The top of the rocket then pivoted into the tank, puncturing it. The fireball followed within

The report is dedicated on the frontspiece to the seven who died in the fireball: Dick Scobee, the spacecraft commander; Michael J. Smith, the pilot; mission specialists Judith Resnik, Ronald McNair and Ellison Onizuka; Gregory Jarvis, a Hughes Aircraft engineer; and Christa McAuliffe, who was to be the first teacher-in-space.

The report stays away from speculation of how long the seven lived when things started to go awry, but it discusses crew safety by recommending studies of emergency escapes when the shuttle is at low and controlled speeds.

"They were getting violent control maneuvers, so they knew something was wrong," said one source close to the commission. "You'll find that in the report. Guidance and control systems were violently trying to correct the flight path, so they were getting pitched around in there for maybe 10 to 15 seconds before the thing finally disintegrated."

Since the accident, NASA has gotten a new administrator, James C. Fletcher, and many of the officials most closely identified with the booster rocket program have retired or been reassigned.

In a 120-day investigation costing $2 million to $4 million, the commission amassed 15,000 pages of testimony from 160 witnesses and catalogued 122,000 pages of announced. "I am convinced that in a short time it will be possible for the situation to quiet down.'

Waldheim was met by a throng of cheering supporters at the headquarters of the People's Party. Some held up a huge banner reading "Long Live Waldheim."

Steyrer, 66, said he had anticipated defeat, but he was "disappointed at the size, the big difference, in the election result.

"One thing must be also said, that in this election it was not only the qualifications of both candidates that played a role but also themes that were pushed from outside," he said.

Chancellor Fred Sinowatz, head of the Socialist-led government, said his party had suffered a serious setback and he would announce Monday whether he would step down.

It is traditional for government leaders to offer their resignation to the new president. Waldheim said he would follow tradition by not accepting an offer by Sinowatz to resign.

Waldheim's victory ended the bitterest presidential campaign in the country's postwar era.

The controversy over his past tarnished Austria's reputation and raised questions abroad about whether this country has dealt honestly with its past, especially its relationship with Nazi Germany. It also touched off a backlash at home, with some Austrians characterizing the charges against Waldheim as a foreign-led smear campaign.

In Tel Aviv, the Israeli government issued a statement, expressing "deep regret and disappointment at the election of Kurt Waldheim as president of Austria."

The statement, read by Foreign Ministry spokesman Ehud Gol, said: "The election did not come as a surprise, but until the last moment, we hoped that logic and reason would prevail, and that the election of a man like Waldheim would be prevented."

Gol said that Prime Minister Shimon Peres, Foreign Minister Yit-zhak Shamir and other Cabinet officials would discuss Monday what steps Israel would take to protest the Israel's deputy foreign minister, Roni Millo, said earlier Sunday on Israel Radio that the Jewish state would cut back its diplomatic and business relations with Austria if Waldheim were elected.

For four months, Waldheim has denied allegations that he belonged to Nazi youth groups before World War II and took part in the killing of prisoners and civilians in the Waldheim acknowledged serving as a desk officer in German Army Group E, whose commander was executed by the Yugoslavs for war crimes. But he said his job was merely to verify field reports, not to carry out operations or give orders.

Recovery attempts continue

From staff and wire reports

The search continues for a 12-year-old girl, Erin Messing of Kansas City, presumed drowned in the Blue River near Tuttle Creek Lake on Manhattan's northeast

Lt. Steve French of the Riley County Police Department said Messing and another female companion were canoeing with a church group from Kansas City when the two apparently fell off a sand bar. The girl was among 16 youths and six adults on the weekend outing.

The group reportedly put in the river for a trip of approximately two miles.

The two had been playing on the sand bar after pulling their canoe off the river and were swept into a swift current about 11:30 a.m. Saturday

The other girl was rescued shortly after the incident, and authorities have been using boats to drag the area where Messing was last seen. The outlet tubes in the dam were also closed after the incident to assist divers attempting to locate the body. Divers have also been searching the area, about a half mile north of Knox Lane below the Tuttle Creek Dam, since Saturday trying to locate the body.

Reagan to serve as assistant to president

By SHELLY WAKEMAN Staff Writer

A key position in the cabinet of K-State's president-elect has been announced. Charles Reagan, professor of philosophy, was given the nod to fill a new post as assistant to the president by president designate Jon Wefald.

During the search to fill the opening, only K-State faculty members with a doctorate or appropriate terminal degree were considered, Wefald said.

Since becoming a member of the faculty, Reagan has taken an active role in the University's governance. Some of his activites and positions include membership in Faculty Senate. Reagan was also president of Faculty Senate for the 1985-86 school year. He was a member of the Presidential Search Committee. The committee was responsible for forwarding Wefald's name along with two others to the Kansas Board of Regents, which conducted the final interviews to pick President Duane Acker's successor. Currently, Reagan serves as chairman of the Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues and is head of the Department of Philosophy.

Robin Smith, professor of philosophy, will become acting head of the philosophy depart-

The assistant will act as liaison between the president and faculty and faculty organizations. Other responsibilities will include preparing background on academic issues, coordinating appointments and assisting the president in preparing for Regents meetings, Wefald said.

Reagan will begin his new job on July 1, the same time Wefald arrives on campus to begin his

Incumbents to face election challenges

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Two Democrats filed Monday for their party's nomination to challenge Republican Sen. Bob Dole in his bid for re-election next fall, and a third declared his intention to file on Tuesday.

Incumbent Representative Jim Slattery will also face opposition with the Monday filing of Phill Kline, 26, a University of Kansas secondyear law student from Lawrence, for the Republican nomination for Congress in the 2nd District of northeast

Jim Oyler, who tried unsuccessfully two years ago for the Republican nomination for Congress in the 3rd District of suburban Kansas City, and Guy MacDonald, a political unknown from Wichita, both filed for the Democratic nomination to the U.S. Senate by paying the $751 filing fee in the secretary of state's office.

Ringer told a rally he organized on the south steps of the Capitol that he would file Tuesday for the Democratic nomination, setting up a three-way Aug. 5 primary in the race to see who challenges Dole, the Senate majority leader, in the November general election.

Oyler, 53, of DeSoto, whose full name is Jimmie D. Oyler, said state Democratic Chairman Jim Parrish encouraged him to seek the party's nomination for the U.S. Senate.

MacDonald, 46, an unemployed Wichita resident, said he was running on his own because, "It's something I've wanted to do for some

Ringer, 33, was the Democratic nominee for Congress in the 1st District two years ago, losing the election to Republican incumbent Pat Roberts by 159,931 votes to Oyler, production manager for a Lenexa company that treats water and waste products, finished fifth and last in the GOP primary for 3rd District Congress in 1984 in a race won by Jan Meyers. He garnered just 2,476 votes out of 47,686 cast.

He said he switched political parties about three months ago in order to seek Democratic nomination to oppose Sen. Bob Dole, the Senate majority leader whose seat is up for election this year.

"Kansas needs a fulltime senator," Oyler told reporters as he paid the $751 filing fee for the Senate nomination with a personal check. 'We need a senator that works with the other senator and representatives from the state."

He said he believes the economy, "protection" for middle class people and veterans, and getting the prisoners of war and missing in action out of Southeast Asia are the major issues in the minds of voters.

Born in Hulbert, Okla., Oyler went to Korea with that state's famed 45th Infantry Division, then attended Oklahoma State University before entering the Navy. He spent 25 years in the Navy, leaving in 1974 as a lieutenant commander aviator who saw duty in Vietnam.

He designs equipment to purify water supplies for Burmah Technical Services of Lenexa, and lives in DeSoto.

MacDonald, a native of Philadelphia, Pa., said he has had a "varied career" since graduating in 1965 from St. Joseph's University with a degree in French, including teaching and spending two years in the Peace Corps. He presently is not working, he said. He declined to comment on whether he thinks Dole can be beaten by a Democrat this year.

Slattery's opponent, a political novice, repeated a familiar GOP charge in talking to reporters after he filed, claiming the incumbent talks one way when he is back home in the 2nd District and votes another way when he is in Washington.

There are two sides to Jim Slattery," Kline told a news conference. "One comes back to the district and talks conservatively to his constituents. The other goes to Washington and does something drastically different."

That is a campaign allegation Republicans in the district have tried to use for years against Slattery and two of his Democratic predecessors, Bill Roy and Martha Keys, largely without success.

Kline, a native of Kansas City, Kan., and a 1978 graduate of Shawnee Mission Northwest High School in Johnson County, paid the $751 filing fee with a check given to him by Eric Rucker, executive director of the state Republican Party. Rucker said the party was paying Kline's filing fee, an unusual but not unprecedented act.

Court decides on 'Baby Doe'

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Supreme Court, striking down the Reagan administration's "Baby Doe" regulations, said Monday the federal government cannot challenge life-ordeath decisions parents make for babies with severe birth defects.

By a 5-3 vote, the court said the administration improperly attempted to override parental wishes and pressure hospitals and doctors to provide medical care that might extend the lives of deformed or gravely ill babies.

The decision, sparked by highly publicized cases in Indiana and New York, will not affect existing state laws that regulate decisions made by doctors and parents in such cases. Officials in some states may override parental wishes. Justice Department lawyers had urged the court to rule that the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 gives federal regulators the power to make sure no hospital receiving federal money denies nourishment or medical treatment to a child "solely because of its handicap." Rejecting that argument, the court said the 1973 law does not apply and the federal government can play no role - when parents do not consent to treatment for their child.

"The court has vindicated the position we've taken all along against government intrusion in the hospital nursery," said Richard L. Epstein of the American Hospital Association.

But Thomas J. Marzen of the National Legal Center for the Medically Dependent and Disabled said, "I think you can anticipate there will be some attempt to amend the federal Reaction from the Reagan administration was not immediately available. Charles Cooper, the Justice Department lawyer who argued the case before the Supreme Court, did not return a reporter's telephone call. Writing for four members of the court, Justice John Paul Stevens said the administration's view of the law amounted to a "manifestly incorrect perception." Stevens said hospitals do not violate federal law when complying with parental wishes to withhold treatment. And he added hospitals are not required by federal law to report parental refusal of life-saving treatments for their infants. He was joined by Justices

Thurgood Marshall, Harry A. Blackmun and Lewis F. Powell. Chief Justice Warren E. Burger voted to strike down the "Baby Doe" regulations but did not sign Stevens'

Justices Byron R. White, William J. Brennan and Sandra Day O'Connor dissented. Justice William H. Rehnquist did not participate in the case for unstated reasons.

Writing for the dissenters, White said, "Discrimination may occur when a doctor encourages or fails to discourage a parental decision to refuse ... treatment for a handicapped child when the doctor would discourage or actually oppose a parental decision to refuse ... the same treatment for a nonhandicapped child."

In other matters, the court: -Refused to force cable television operators to carry all local TV signals of their systems, letting stand a ruling that struck down the Federal Communications Commission's so-called "must carry" rules.

-Agreed to hear the appeal of a Florida death row inmate who says the state's capital punishment law is being applied in a racially biased

-Refused to let Bernalillo County, N.M., continue using a county seal found to be too religious. The seal features a cross and a Spanish motto meaning "With This We Overcome."

-Said it will study in a California case whether state and local governments may regulate high-stakes bingo games and other gambling operations on Indian reservations.

-Let stand a ruling in an Alabama case that unions may be sued for failing to oppose racial discrimination at businesses where they represent

-Unanimously ruled in a case from Michigan that federal courts have broad authority to review government methods for determining Medicare rates.

Cancer claims life of prairie director

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's director of the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area Lloyd C. Hulbert, 67, died May 23 in the Bahamas where he was seeking treatment for cancer.

A professor in the Division of Biology, Hulbert had been a member of the K-State faculty for 31 years after arriving as an assistant professor of botany in 1955.

He earned a bachelor's degree from Michigan State University in 1940 and a doctorate from Washington State College in 1953. As a conscientious objector from 1942 to 1946, Hulbert worked as a range conservationist for the U.S. Forest Service. He served as a "smoke jumper," making parachute jumps into forest fires.

While at K-State, Hulbert was instrumental in obtaining the Konza Prairie for use by various University researchers. In 1960, he believed work to acquire the land should begin so that over time it would revert back to its natural state and eventually be studied. An ideal natural area, he believed, should contain, in a majority of the area, the animals that were present before white men and women arrived.

Hulbert believed natural areas can help scientists prevent human misery though understanding land use problems and gaining insight into land management.

When K-State received its first gift of about 920 acres of native bluestem prairie from The Nature Conservancy in 1971, Hulbert became director of the land and the research conducted on it. Throughout his tenure, the natural research area provided by the Conservancy grew to 8,616 acres at a value of $3.6 million.

In 1978, The Nature Conservancy honored Hulbert with the President's Stewardship Award to recognize outstanding work on one of the preserves designated by the organization. Hulbert also wrote many professional publications in the area of plant ecology.

Austrian chancellor quits job

By The Associated Press

VIENNA, Austria - The Socialist government changed leaders Monday, a day after an increasingly disenchanted electorate gave conservative Kurt Waldheim a solid victory over the Socialists' presidential can-

Fred Sinowatz, 57, resigned as chancellor after a six-hour meeting of the Socialist Party leadership. He said he would devote himself to his duties as party chairman and prepare for parliamentary elections next April.

He was replaced by Franz Vranitzky, the 48-year-old finance minister, who is scheduled to visit the United States in two weeks. "I do not rule out other changes in the government," Vranitzky said.

The move was seen as an effort by the Socialists, who have governed for 16 years, to halt a conservative trend and restructure the government before the elections. Political power in Austria rests with the chancellor, who is chosen by the parliamentary majority, not in the largely ceremonial presidency.

Austrian Television called the resignation "a domestic policy bomb."

Waldheim, 67, backed by the conservative Austrian People's Party, won 53.9 percent of the vote in Sunday's presidential election to 46.1 percent for Kurt Steyrer, the Socialist candidate.

The former U.N. secretarygeneral was dogged throughout the camaign by foreign allegations that he knew about Nazi war crimes and lied about serving as a German army lieutenant in the Balkans during World War II. He denies wrongdoing.

Many voters focused on domestic issues. The government has been plagued in recent years by accusations of waste, inefficiency and fostering a top-heavy bureaucracy.

Waldheim, who will be sworn into office July 8 relacing Rudolf Kirchschlaeger, maintained Monday that Austria's reputation remains "excellent" despite the accusations surrounding his campaign.

"Just because of some criticism by the media of some developments, one should not believe that the Austrian image has suffered," he said. "Many countries have their

Israel recalled its ambassador for consultations to protest his election, but Waldheim said: "I am of course interested to maintain friendly relations with Israel, as I have in the past. I do not see any real problems in this regard."

Sinowatz, who led the government for more than three years, said Waldheim's victory played a role in his decision to resign but it also stemmed from Socialist setbacks in recent regional and local elections.

"I believe one must have the strength, depending on the development, on the political situation and on the expediency, also to break with habits that have been maintained so far," he said. The last reference was to the tradition of having one person hold both the party and government

Vranitzky said he would continue "the social network" of government support of ailing industries and the poor, and creation of new jobs, but he made clear that government subsidies for deficit-ridden industries will not continue forever.

He said the government had paid almost 30 billion schillings (nearly $2 billion) "to ensure the viability" of other enterprises

The new chancellor is former director-general of Laenderbank. Austria's second-largest nationalized bank, and joined the government in September 1984. He has gained a reputation as a capable financier and a good administrator.

He said Kirchschlaeger would swear in his new government Mon-

The Socialists have a coalition with the Freedom Party. Sinowatz and Norbert Steger, the Freedom Party chairman, said it would continue.

As Austria's head of state, he will receive foreign guests and make state visits to other countries. Legislators in some countries, including the United States, Britain and Israel, have demanded that he be banned from their territory because of the charges about his war

In Washington, Justice Department spokesman Patrick Korten said Sunday that Waldheim's status as head of state would preclude any action against him under laws allowing the government to deny visas to undesirable aliens.

Future of shuttle depends on changes

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Returning the shuttle to orbit will take time, and will require revitalized management at NASA and the likely redesign of not only the solid-fuel booster rockets but also the main engines, brakes and other systems.

The return to space and the flight rate will depend on a number of unresolved issues, such as the number of changes required, an escape mode for the astronauts during the critical moments of landing. new stands for testing the overhauled rockets, a replacement for the destroyed Challenger and the use of unmanned rockets to carry many payloads earmarked for the shuttle.

In its report on the Jan. 28 shuttle explosion, the Rogers Commission addressed these issues Monday, making specific recommendations in some cases and leaving the solution of others up to NASA.

'We found a lot of things that need attention," Chairman William P. Rogers told a news conference.

If the space agency adopts all the commission recommendations and suggestions, its goal of flight resumption in July 1987 could be pushed back a year or two.

Resumption of flights could be delayed by several months if officials accept the commission's suggestion that "full consideration should be given" to test-firing redesigned booster rockets upright instead of horizontally as in the past, so as to more closely approximate launch conditions. NASA said this would require building new test stands and would be a costly and complicated procedure.

The commission blamed the accident on a poorly designed booster rocket joint and its No. 1 recommendation was that "the faulty solid rocket motor joint and seal must be changed" without regard to cost or

The report said problems with the joints were known but unsolved because of a weak management and communications structure both within NASA and the booster rocket contractor, Morton-Thiokol. It said the joints "should be fully understood, tested and verified" and their strength should equal or surpass that of the rocket casing. In recent congressional testimony, Arnold Aldrich, manager of the shuttle office at the Johnson Space Center, said 44 potential shuttle safety concerns had been identified involving the orbiter, the fuel tank and the main shuttle engine. He said all of these might have to be addressed before resuming flights.

The main shuttle engines have experienced valve failures, leaks and premature wearing and cracking of turbine blades. The brakes have locked on some landings.

The report recommended an overhaul of NASA's management structure and said the space agency's shuttle chief at headquarters should exert more control over individual field centers.

Without being specific, the commission said the agency should make all efforts to provide a crew escape system for use during the critical moments when a shuttle is gliding back to Earth for a landing. To do so also would require a major redesign which could take considerable time.

The report recognized there is little chance a crew could escape if trouble developed during the first two minutes after liftoff when the booster rockets are firing, so it did not recommend an escape system for that period. But it said NASA should make every effort "to increase the range of flight conditions under which an emergency runway landing can be successfully conducted in the event two or three main engines fail early in ascent."

That might involve landings at municipal airports along the Florida east coast.

Still to be decided is whether to build a replacement for Challenger. NASA's new administrator, James C. Fletcher, has called for one, and President Reagan is expected to ask Congress to give its approval, but he may try to pay for it with $2.8 billion in savings from other government programs.

When flights resume, military payloads and astronauts will be dominant

The Defense Department is expected to exercise its priority on shuttle missions because key reconnaissance and other military satellites have backed up during the grounding of the shuttle and of the Air Force's Titan 34D rocket, which has failed two straight times. And the commission recommended expanded use of expendable rockets for satellite launches, to relieve some of the pressure for unsupportably high launch rates for the shuttle. Administration officials already are weighing such a move.

Fletcher, responding to the commission, vowed that NASA would regroup and regain the nation's

Former professor dies after broadcast career

By The Collegian Staff

Virginia Howe, professor emeritus of journalism and mass communications, died Sunday of natural causes at Meadowlark Hills Retirement Community. She was 75.

Howe lived a life of adventure and provided thousands of others with adventures to escape into. From 1945 to 1947, Howe was a script writer for "The Lone Ranger" show at radio station WXYZ in Detroit. Born in Gardner, Mass., in 1910, Howe earned a bachelor's degree from Elmira College, N.Y., in 1935. She earned a master's in 1949 and a doctorate in 1958, both from Boston

Before she wove tales of the Wild West for the airwaves, Howe worked as a newspaper reporter and feature writer at the Binghamton Press in Binghamton, N.Y. She then moved into an advertising position with a radio station in the same city. Howe moved quickly through the many opportunities that broadcast journalism provided for her.

During World War II, Howe joined the Women's Army Corps, spending three years there. While serving in the WAC, she worked in public relations, military intelligence and at one point was a company commander at Fort D'Evans, Mass.

After her service ended in 1945, she went to the Detroit radio station where, in addition to writing "Lone Ranger" scripts, she worked as the music librarian.

In 1947, she came to K-State to teach classes in broadcasting. Howe took time off to earn her master's and doctoral degrees, but while at K-State she taught radio courses in children's, women's and sports pro-

When the demand for broadcasting in the United States changed from radio to TV, Howe adapted. She taught a script writing and programming class and used the course as an avenue to pass on her knowledge of broadcast writing.

Some broadcast teachers were so enthralled with technological advancements that they forgot the importance of accuracy, colorful writing, grammar, punctuation and spelling, she believed.

She is survived by her brother, Dr. Dana H. Howe of Los Alamos, Calif. Services will be 10:30 a.m. Wednesday at the Meadowlark Hill Retirement Community, 2121 Meadowlark

Probe finds agency problems

Shuttle report specifies | NASA leader promises faulty joint, hierarchy to consider suggestions

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Rogers Commission said Monday a breached booster rocket joint, whose weaknesses were known but ignored, destroyed the space shuttle Challenger, and that NASA must return to the safety-first policy of the Apollo moonflight days.

James C. Fletcher, a former head of NASA only five weeks into his second stint at the helm, promised to respond to the conclusions "with an open mind and without reservations."

The commission called the Jan. 28 Challenger tragedy, which claimed seven lives, "an accident rooted in

William P. Rogers, chairman of the presidential investigative panel, said, "We know exactly how this accident occurred. I certainly hope there will be no nagging questions."

The commission was not asked to assess blame "and we have not assessed blame," Rogers told a news conference. "Obviously, there was a serious failure. We are not going to go beyond that."

Fletcher promised that the space agency is prepared to study the Rogers Commission conclusions "with an open mind and without reservations.'

"There's enough blame to go around," he said. "The fault was not with any single person or group. It was NASA's fault. I don't think we should be assigning blame. We should be assigning people to fix what went wrong, and make sure it doesn't happen again."

Fletcher told a late afternoon news conference that the space agency regards July 1987 as a realistic goal "not an optimistic one" - for resumption of shuttle flights, based on all the recommendations made by the commission.

One of the commission's recommendations, the appointment of an independent committee of experts to review any new booster designs, came into fruition Monday, when the National Research Council announced formation of a panel of experts in the fields of propulsion, materials, reliability and aerospace engineer-

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, the first American to orbit the Earth, said the commission showed "the mindset of few people in key positions at NASA had gone from an optimistic shuttle to supply another.

and super safety-conscious 'can-do' attitude, when I was in the program, to an arrogant 'can't fail' attitude on the day the Challenger exploded."

The commission dismissed any thought that sabotage might have played a part in the explosion.

The report pinned the cause of the explosion squarely on the seal between the bottom two segments of the shuttle's right booster which failed to contain the white-hot flames and gases generated when the rocket ig-

The shuttle would not have been launched, the commission said, had top launch managers been aware of opposition from rocket engineers who feared the effects of cold temperatures on the ability of O-ring seals to work.

Although the commission called for many changes in NASA's practices, the final report singled out the Marshall Space Flight Center, the facility in Huntsville, Ala., which oversees the booster rocket pro-

The commission said it was troubled by Marshall's practice of trying to resolve potentially serious problems internally rather than communicating them forward. That "management isolation" needs to be eliminated "whether by changes of personnel, organization, indoctrination or all three," its report said.

Rendering its verdict on the nation's worst space disaster after a 120-day probe, the commission demanded that NASA change the design on the solid rocket boosters. The commission report made these other recommendations:

- NASA should see to the formation of an independent committee to oversee the redesign effort on the booster rocket;

 NASA should overhaul its shuttle management system to give the program manager greater authority, and set up a shuttle safety panel including representatives from their astronaut corps and establish a new safety organization that would be independent of other NASA program

Conduct a comprehensive review of all items whose performance are deemed critical to shuttle

Called on NASA to establish a flight schedule more "consistent with its resources," and stop the practice of removing parts from one

WASHINGTON - NASA Administrator James Fletcher said Monday he would consider the recommendations of the Rogers Commission with "an open mind and without reservations," and pledged to force changes that would allow the agency to "overcome our errors not to quit, to stop or to cave in."

He said the commission criticism of NASA was "not unexpected and certainly not entirely undeserved."

In a prepared statement, Fletcher said, "Where management is weak, we will strengthen it. Where enginering or design or process need improving, we will improve them. Where our internal communications are poor, we will see that they get

The recovery will be done, Fletcher said, "in a more restrictive atmosphere than we have become accustomed to.... Like other departments and agencies of government, we will work under the severe budget limitations and restrictions of our time...But we cannot and will not sacrifice safety concerns to budget limitations."

He said the space agency welcomed the commission report on the Jan. 28 Challenger accident - a document critical of NASA for delegating safety to a secondary concern.

"It was obviously time for a serious, thoughtful, constructive view of the agency," Fletcher said. He said NASA's shining image was 'blurred by a horrible accident. Confidence which arose from an unprecedented string of successes was crushed with the Challenger tragedy.

"We are going to deal responsibly with our loss, without needless recrimination, and we are going to move forward, facing and conquering the challenges that face us.

'Sarge' stays to fight another day

With Norris Coleman's decision to stay at K-State next year comes an uncertain future for the 24-year old former Army sergeant who has been declared ineligible to play for the Wildcats until Feb., 27, 1987.

Coleman shunned several collegiate basketball powerhouses along the way toward making his decision to stay with K-State. Although he will not play for months yet, Coleman may step onto another kind of court to do battle with National Collegiate Athletic Association officials.

Coleman's decision to remain at K-State is an action that speaks highly of "Sarge." Coleman was playing on Army teams before being picked up by Jack Hartman to play at the collegiate level.

An obscure player outside the service, Coleman could have used his trip into college basketball's limelight to springboard onto any one of a number of the nation's finest basketball programs.

This says a lot about the character of the man. He has handled this entire affair, which has occasionally become publicly humiliating, with patience and class.

Coleman has had to endure his high school transcript being aired on television, playing for a lameduck coach much of the season, waiting in limbo for months while others made decisions about his future and then entertaining thoughts of new coaches, new schools and new surroundings.

He chose people who have backed him all along and a hearty contratulations goes out to him.

> Tony Carbajo, for the editorial board

Press paranoia closes locker rooms

In an effort to prevent the press from making something out of nothing, K-State football Coach Stan Parrish has closed his locker room doors to post-game interviews.

Instead of being free to wander the locker room and talk to whatever players they choose or trip across, reporters will now be required to request the presence of the players they wish to interview.

The result of the new policy will not be a noticable change of the game-story content to most readers, but it will inconvenience the press. And inconveniencing the press can be as wise as name calling in the presence of Mr. T.

Even though most readers will be unable to notice a difference in the game stories, readers more than likely will see a fewer number of player features and other coverage of the Wildcat football program.

There should be no change next fall in the ability of the Collegian to cover the football team, but other papers will be hindered by the policy. Even though all three of the major area papers - the Kansas City Star-Times, the Wichita Eagle-Beacon and Topeka Capital-Journal - all have stringers at K-State to help cover Wildcat athletics, the full-time writers (who write the game stories) will have less access to players.

That is only the three major papers. What about the small-town paper which covers K-State games because so many local folks have K-State ties? What will happen to Wildcat coverage in mid-sized newspapers which cannot afford to use stringers?

Those types of papers will now be restricted in their coverage of K-State football. The result will be a disservice to the local readers and battling K-State's efforts to paint all the news a cheery shade of purple.

The new policy has caused members of the press to be more than a little upset with K-State. Parrish said he believes the new policy will protect his players and not prevent the members of the press from doing anything they already do.

But, what lies at the heart of the issue is Parrish's and the K-State athletic department's misunderstanding of the intent and purposes of the press.

A round of applause should go to new basketball coach Lon Kruger who is opening the locker room to the press after his predecessor Jack Hartman had kept it closed tight. But, it is much easier for K-State officials to monitor what 12 basketball players might say, rather than 60 football players.

The constant paranoia that the press is out to get K-State is getting out of hand. The press more likely think if there is nothing to hide, then there is nothing to be paranoid Policies restricting access of the press to K-State programs will not prevent negative stories about K-State from appearing, but instead push the press to try to find what all the paranoia is about.

If K-State keeps losing football games, the news about K-State football will remain the same dull shade of purple that it has always been. This isn't the press's fault, and at this point the only man who can change the news is Parrish.

Here is some big news for the athletic department - the press reports the news. When K-State loses or errs, it isn't the press making it news, it is K-State itself.

Education needs volunteer teachers

Whatever its faults, the report of the Carnegie Forum on Education cannot be criticized for a lack of boldness. The business, political and educational leaders who signed it proposed no less than a revolution in classroom teaching.

They suggested that undergraduate degrees in education be abolished. Teachers, they said, should have a broad liberal arts background and an advanced degree in teaching. They said top-line teachers should be so certified by a national board of their peers. They said those board-certified teachers should be placed in charge of their schools and held accountable for the schools' performance. And they said those teachers should be paid on a level equivalent to other professionals.

That is controversial enough. But in one respect, I wish the commission had been even bolder. I wish it had embraced the idea of voluntary national service in the classroom for many of the millions of college students being educated with government aid for high-paying jobs.

The underlying rationale for such a proposal is implicit in the powerfully persuasive report titled "A Nation Prepared: Teachers for the 21st Century," issued in May. But the recommendation doesn't appear there.

The commission headed by Lewis M. Branscomb, chief scientist of IBM, made several points.

The nation faces a severe shortage of teachers, with many of those now in the classrooms approaching retirement age and a shrunken "baby-bust" college generation coming along behind them.

Already, too many of the top students entering college are shunning teaching in favor of higher-paying alternative careers. Almost half the students now enrolling as education majors come from non-academic high-school programs, not even designed to prepare them for college work.

DAVID BRODER Syndicated Columnist

There is a crying need for more support people in the typical high school and grade school, so that teachers can spend their full time doing their jobs, rather than being burdened with administrative and clerical

To impart the skills needed for America's economic survival in the next century, the "master teachers" envisaged by this report must be freed to tackle the toughest educational problems in their schools, with less demanding instruction being given by associates with somewhat lesser skills.

Tutoring - direct, person-to-person instruction - is a demonstrably successful teaching technique. It works particularly well when older students tutor those just a few years younger. Both the tutors and their pupils come away with increased mastery of

Where can these needed classroom support eople be found? Some communities have had good success in persuading retirees or parents or public-spirited professionals to volunteer a few hours of tutoring or teaching time a week. But the greatest potential source of assistance may be found right in the classroom - the college classroom - of

To me, the obvious implication of the Carnegie Commission report is that many of the brightest and best-educated young people now moving through our colleges - people who currently spurn education as a lifetime in the high schools and grade schools from which they have come.

Is there an incentive to offer them? Indeed there is. The Department of Education says that this year, some 5.5 million people are attending college with the assistance of federal grants or federally subsidized loans, at a cost to the taxpayers of close to $9 billion. As readers of this column know, I have strongly defended these loans and grants against proposed budget cutbacks. Education is the best investment we can make in the nation's future.

But I also believe that turnabout is fair play. Two previous generations of college students received their education subsidies as a reward for military service. Today's subsidized college students face no draft. But America needs more of them in the gradeschool and high-school classrooms.

For those who accept government grants to finance college degrees, a year's apprenticeship, at modest salary, as a teacher's aide does not seem an inappropriate or inordinate sacrifice to ask. For those who use government-subsidized loans to get through college, a combination of loan forgiveness and a small starting salary may be enough to induce a number of classroom volunteers. Offers of government assistance in graduate education could be conditioned on a year or two of classroom service before the advanced-degree work begins.

Some of those recruited into temporary teaching aide or tutoring jobs this way would undoubtedly find that education is a rewarding field. Others would go on with their original career plans. But just think what it would mean if communities knew that today's 2.2 million teachers would be reinforced - at modest additional cost - with volunteered help from some of the 5.5 million college students the taxpayers are now subsidizing.

Live TV experiment continues in Congress

WASHINGTON - With oratory, poetry and prayer, with blue shirts, red ties and visual aids, with waving arms and a touch of humor, 100 United States senators entered the world of television and by and large pronounced it good.

But senators knew that the remote controlled cameras focusing on their faces from the galleries overhead represented potential peril as well as present opportuni-

"Father in Heaven, guide, direct and bless this trial marriage between two potentially incompatible partners — legislation and entertainment," said Senate Chaplain Richard C. Halverson as he offered the opening prayer on Day Three of the great television experiment.

"I have seen more body language in the delivery of senators than ever before," said Senate Democratic leader Robert C. Byrd of West Virginia.

"I think that some of those who were opposed to having trial television in the Senate are now likely to be very happy with it because they seem to be doing very well with it," he said.

In setting up the rules to guide its experiment in television the Senate gave itself an escape hatch.

Under the rules, live television coverage will end on July 15 and the Senate will begin a two-week period of soul-searching and adjustment. It will then vote on whether to continue or end the experiment, or whether to make TV coverage a permanent fixture.

Poll shows 'Baby Boom' shoppers diverse

NEW YORK - The "baby boom" generation is more diverse than many marketers may have suspected, a leading advertising agency says. N.W. Ayer Inc. says in a new report it has been sharing with its clients that there are four distinct cliques important to marketers in the 25- to-44-year-old age group.

"Baby boomers as a single uniform group moving steadily through the U.S. life cycle ... exist only in the minds of demographers," said Fred Posner, a senior vice president at Ayer, which spent a year developing the report.

The baby boom generation is a population group that has been courted by advertisers for decades and will likely command their attention for decades to come. It includes people born between 1946 and 1964 and is expected to number about 80 million in 1990, comprising 33 percent of the country's population and controlling nearly half of its income, Ayer said. In an effort to examine the group more closely, Ayer persuaded 632 baby boomers from across the country to complete a 700-question survey that asked them about their attitudes toward life, personal relationships and self-image, what they buy or hope to buy and what they watch on television.

The agency said the responses indicated the group is divided like this:

Satisfied selves, comprising about 34 percent of the group. The report described these people as well-educated, optimistic, innovative, open to new ideas and ready to take risks.

Contented traditionalists, which make up about 31 percent of the group. They are self-assured, conservative and home-oriented and favor traditional values while Worried traditionalists, which account for about 23 percent of the group. They embrace traditional values but anticipate disaster on all fronts, worrying about being mugged or losing their jobs. They have a poorly defined self-image, emulate trends and use brands as a way of communicating who they are.

- The '60s in the '80s, who make up about 10 percent of the group. They are the "flower children" of the 1980s, aimless and unfulfilled and unable to find the job they want or a direction in life.

Ayer advises clients to try to take advantage of each sub-group's characteristics when attempting to market products.

Grandfather charged with family slayings

LANSING, Mich. - A 79-year-old man suspected of killing his daughter and son-inlaw and wounding his invalid wife and three grandchildren at a family dinner was arrested today after shooting himself in the stomach, authorities said.

"I don't care what jurisdiction you're in, whether it's L.A., New York or Chicago, this is really weird," said Eaton County Prosecutor G. Michael Hocking. "I've been here for 10 years and I haven't had a case where we had six people shot, ... nothing where a grandfather tries to wipe out the whole family," he said. Melville Nelson Henwood was arrested about 4:15 a.m. in a car three miles from the shooting scene, said Sheriff Art Kelsey. He was listed in critical condition after surgery at St. Lawrence Hospital in Lansing, said spokeswoman Jan Timmer. A warrant charging Henwood with 12 counts, including two of open murder and four of assault with intent to murder, was being prepared, Hocking said. Killed in the Sunday evening shooting at the Henwood home just south of Lansing, were Henwood's daughter, Elizabeth Flory, and her husband, John, both in their 40s, said sheriff's Sgt. Mike Boes. Henwood's wife Edna, 78, and three of their grandchildren - Michael Flory, 10; Christy Flory, 12; and Gail Scott, 17 - were wounded, The shootings apparently occurred after a dispute during Sunday dinner, Kelsey said. Edna Henwood had been living at her daughter's house because of a medical condition, and Henwood apparently did not like that, he said.

Women feel life complicated, value gains

NEW YORK - Only half of all women who have been married one time say they would marry the same man if they had it to do over again, according to a new Eighty-three percent of women surveyed agreed that men have gained more than women from the social changes of the past 20 years. But though 87 percent felt their lives have grown more complicated in that time, most women still feel they're better off now than they were in 1966.

'No matter what situation she's in herself, today's woman is likely to value the economic and personal gains women have made," said Ethel Klein, associate professor of political science at Columbia University.

More than 56,000 women completed questionnaires which had been published in Women's Day magazine. The pollsters, Yankelovich, Skelly & White, then chose 3,009 of the forms at random and tabulated them.

Among the findings: Seventy-five percent feel men expect too much of them in the area of child care and 73 percent feel men expect too much housework. Forty-six percent said their husbands were understanding but not very helpful when they were too busy to keep the household running smoothly, while 17 percent said their husbands grow irritated - Half of the once-married women said they would marry the same man again, 38 percent said they would not and the rest were undecided

Of those in their first marriages, only 55 percent felt they got married for the right reasons, while 41 percent said they did not. While majorities believe women have gained more than they've lost in the past 20 years when it comes to careers and relationships with men, 40 percent feel they've lost more than they've gained in terms of children and family life. Eighty percent believe men underestimate them in the workplace. But given the choice, 43 percent would pick a male boss and 14 percent would chose a woman. Forty-three percent said they would choose the same type of work if they had it to do over again, but 45 percent said they would not.

Half say today's woman works harder than those of the past; 38 percent disagree. Seventy-three percent said women today work not out of choice, but because it is an economic necessity.

The survey found that 59 percent believe women who stay at home to take care of their children are less respected than women who hold paying jobs.

school to 85-year-old percussionist Charles Moorman of St. George.

Each performance - all will be on Tuesdays except for a July 21 concert - will include vocal and instrumental solos. Tonight's concert will feature soprano Jean Sloop, professor of music, and Rod Manges on the synthesizer. Manges is the band director at Manhattan High School and assistant director for the Municipal Band.

Other vocal soloists will be soprano Jennifer Edwards on June 17; soprano Marjean Harshbarger on June 24; baritone Jerry Reeck, professor of biochemistry, on July 1; baritone J.V. Heffel on July 8; and Musicians range in age from high tenor Jerry Langenkamp, professor of music, on July 15.

Other instrumental soloists will be clarinetist Frank Sidorfsky, associate professor of music, on June 17; French horn player Enrique Alcaraz-Lopez, senior in music education, on June 24; and trumpeter Paul Shull, professor in music, on July 1. Instrumental soloists for the remaining dates have not been determined

The Municipal Band's final Arts in the Park concert July 21 will feature various tunes played throughout the summer. The band also will have a concert in Clay Center June 18. In an exchange, the Clay Center Band will perform in City Park July 22.

Congressmen take on tobacco ads

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Arguing that cigarette advertising is not protected by the First Amendment, seven congressmen on Monday introduced legislation to ban all forms of tobacco promotion, including newspaper and magazine ads, athletic sponsorships, billboards, posters and even matchbook covers.

"The right to commercial free speech is not absolute," said Rep. Mike Synar, D-Okla., the principal sponsor. "Congress has the authority to limit commercial speech when a substantial government interest is "One could hardly imagine an issue of greater government concern than the loss of 350,000 lives annually from a single product," Synar added.

But the bill was immediately, attacked by the Tobacco Institute, the trade association for cigarette manufacturers.

Spokesman Scott Stapf called the "blatantly proposal unconstitutional," a position shared by the American Civil Liberties Union.

Stapf also said studies abroad have tle effect on smoking habits. Rebutting arguments by Synar, Stapf said cigarette advertising is aimed at switching brands among existing adult smokers rather than enticing young people into the habit.

Synar was joined in sponsoring the bill by Reps. Mike Lowry, D-Wash.; Al Swift, D-Wash.; Jim Hansen, R-Utah; Samuel Stratton, D-N.Y.; Gerry Studds, D-Mass.; and Chester Atkins, D-Mass.

The measure would cover cigarettes, cigars, pipe tobacco, snuff and chewing tobacco. Promotional activities would be prohibited from the manufacturer down to the retailer.

Banned practices would include broadcast, newspaper and magazine ads, billboards, posters, signs, decals, matchbook covers, displays on store shelves or counters, promotional allowances, premiums and free samples.

forbidden from sponsoring athletic or artistic events under a brand name. They also would not be allowed to promote a non-tobacco product or service carrying the same name or logo as a tobacco product, a practice that in some countries has allowed backdoor cigarette advertising.

Broadcast advertising of cigarettes has been banned by federal law

Synar said smoking is the chief cause of preventable illness in the United States and led to the deaths of some 350,000 people last year. Treating those illnesses cost Americans $22 billion last year, including $4 billion from the federal Treasury, he said. The country lost $43 billion lost productivity because of smoking, he said.

"These statistics are mindboggling, but we have grown numb to them - largely as a result of the advertising techniques of tobacco manufacturers," who spend about $2 billion a year on ads, Synar added.

Synar said Rep. Henry Waxman, D-Calif., chairman of the House Energy and Commerce health subcommittee, has promised to hold hearings on the bill. But he said under questioning that chances for passage this year are slim, due to opposition both by powerful tobaccostate politicians and by media concerned about losing advertising

"We don't look at this as an easy battle," Synar acknowedged.

Students pay fees at unhurried pace

By JENNY CHAULK Staff Writer

Enrollment for the summer term at the K-State Union was a hot and harried affair Monday, as both students and workers coped with the heat and long lines.

Enrollment began on the ground floor of the Union, then continued upstairs through the Ballroom and the K, S and U rooms. What appeared to be a confusing process for some seemed simple to others.

"It looks confusing because you start down here and then have to go upstairs," Ann Rasmussen, senior in elementary education, said. Rasmussen went to enroll at 11 a.m. and had been waiting five minutes to get her fee and activator cards. "I figured the whole thing would only take about five minutes," she said, "but I guess the wait isn't too bad."

Rasmussen pre-enrolled in the spring for summer school. For those who enrolled Monday, the process was a little longer. Carolyn Rynott, junior in modern languages, worked for the University looking for activator cards of students not yet enrolled.

"The biggest problem," Rynott said, "is people coming to the wrong line." She said that after students receive their cards, they are sent to fill them out next to the vending machines on the ground floor. They then go upstairs to the Ballroom to go through computer enrollment.

Debbie Fowler, junior in general engineering, was waiting in line outside the Ballroom to said. "I have gone to summer school at KU before, and KU is a lot slower. This enrollment has gone a lot faster. I don't know if I came on a good day or what."

"I'm a transfer student from Washburn University," Fowler James said.

Inside the Ballroom at 11:30 a.m., lines at the computer terminals averaged six people. Jasmin Elzinga, sophomore in social work, was fourth in one of those lines.

"I'm a transfer student and I'm lost," Elzinga said. "I went to Brigham Young University before. There, they enroll you by telephone or through the mail. It was a lot easier than this is." Elzinga said people working enrollment had been helpful and Marj Cleland, assistant to the dean in the College of Arts and Sciences, worked at an information table for Arts and Sciences students in the Ballroom. "If students have questions about drop/add or need general information, we can help them here,"

"All colleges and some departments have information tables here," said Cleland, who has worked through the summer enrollment process before.

Myrna James, senior in social work and English, validated ID cards, the last step in the enrollment process. "A lot of people don't know where to get IDs," James said. "They are just here for the summer and don't think that they need to have one.

James said she had been busy all morning and had not yet enrolled for classes. "They told me I could go enroll whenever I got a break. That probably won't be until late this afternoon,"

Norris Coleman has made up his mind and what seemed like an impossible dream to many K-State fans has come true.

After visiting five schools which he was interested in transferring to, Coleman announced Monday he would remain at K-State and sit out a year - barring any court action against the NCAA to reinstate Coleman's eligibility.

The 24-year-old Army veteran, led the nation in scoring for freshmen last season averaging more than 20 points a game for the Wildcats. The NCAA ruled him ineligible in late February over a technicality from his high school transcript of 1979.

After K-State lost an appeal in late May, Coleman visited Maryland, Virginia, Jacksonville, Louisiana State and Kentucky. Coleman had told the Collegian after the first ruling that "(I) couldn't see myself sitting out a year at my age.'

Coleman, who was voted Big Eight Newcomer of the Year, was not available for comment, but issued a statement through the office of his attorney, Jeff Schem-mel, in Topeka. "I have spent a lot of time in the last 30 days looking at the options that are available to me in light of the NCAA's ruling concerning my eligibility," he said. "Those options included a possibility of turning pro, transferring to another school and being immediately eligible or remaining at Kansas State. I narrowed a list of approximately 25 interested schools down to five and I visited all five.

"K-State has had faith in me and the people here have stayed with me through the whole affair...I have established a good academic record at K-State," Coleman said. "I am excited to play for K-State and Lon Kruger.'

Parrish opts to shut locker room access

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Stan Parrish figures the media — unwittingly or otherwise - can help shape the attitude of players and consequently influence the outcome of football

And so, plunging into what everyone agrees is the biggest challenge of his career, he has served notice that the K-State locker room will henceforth be closed to all sportswriters and sportscasters.

K-State will thus be one of the few Division I schools in the country that does not permit post-game interviews in an informal setting as players peel away their pads. Instead, requested players will be brought to the weight room next

It's a sharp break from K-State football policy of the past. And Parrish has, in fact, been asked to put as much distance as possible between the Wildcats and their past, which includes the worst won-loss record in the conference.

But the man who was hired from Marshall University to take charge after the firing of Jim Dickey admits his locker room policy has raised more clamor than he expected. Listening politely to arguments from several news-gathering organizations, he has decided not to budge.

"I don't understand what it is that they've been able to do that they're not going to be able to do now," he said.

Parrish points out the K-State locker room is cramped and says parents and well-wishers are being evicted right along with the press. The policy will also, he adds, protect players from exploitation-minded representatives from the Fourth

Parrish does not suggest that a closed locker room will necessarily help K-State win. But, he does believe newspaper stories can tinker with a team's mental outlook.

"I don't think any coach if he's honest with you will deny that things that are written in newspapers can have a bearing on the way kids play, because it can effect their emotional intensity," he said.

Firing back, writers say closing the locker room denies reasonable access to players, makes their job more difficult and sets a bad precedent. Moreover, some believe, it could break down communication between the public and the school's administrators and athletes. And K-State, they add, is a tax-supported state institution.

"No. 1, our locker room is totally inadequate space-wise, and I don't like congestion in there," Parrish said. "Secondly, they can talk with as many players as they want. I think some people wander through locker rooms looking for situations and looking to create news when there really isn't any news to create. Some people just walk by and pick up the first guy they see, particularly when things havn't gone well for a

"If you're at a winning program, it's different," he said. "I think when you're going to rebuild a program and re-tool you should do it from Step A all the way up. I think this is best for our players. For our program, and where we're at and where we're trying to go right now, this is the best way for us."

The interview-room setting destroys spontaniety, some writers have told him. They say readers, and ticket buyers, sometimes get their best perspective on a game from angles developed in from quotes that are picked up by filtering through the locker room.

"I've heard that argument about the spinoff stories and this and that," Parrish said. "I've been coaching 18 years and I've probably read three of them. Okay? I have nothing whatsoever against the writers. I want to cooperate to the fullest. But they have to understand the situation we're in here."

Parrish believes his previous teams have been hurt by opening their locker rooms.

"Along the way I've learned that to some extent I've been exploited with locker room policies in the past," he said. "I think they put our kids into some very, very tough situations that I probably could have helped insulate for some of them.'

Former K-State basketball coach Jack Hartman also instituted a closed locker room policy during his 16-year tenure with the Wildcat basketball program.

Stan Parrish, K-State head football coach, has decided to close the football locker rooms to the press following games.

Seattle knocks off KC

By The Associated Press

Bob Kearney drove in two runs with his first homer of the year to help the Seattle Mariners snap a fivegame losing streak with a 5-3 victory over the Kansas City Royals Monday

Winner Mark Langston, 5-5, gave up only three hits before leaving in the ninth with tightness in his left elbow as the Mariners notched their seventh consecutive victory in Kansas City. The Royals have not beaten the Mariners here since Sept. 9, 1984.

Kearney, hitting .195, clubbed his first homer of the year off starter Dennis Leonard, 6-5, to put Seattle

Harold Reynolds struck out in the first on Leonard's wild pitch but got to first base before catcher Jim Sundberg could retrieve the ball and eventually scored on Alvin Davis'

Rudy Law led off the Royals' third with a fly ball into right which Dave Henderson dropped. Law easilly circled the bases as the ball rolled to the wall for a four-base error.

Seattle went back in front in the fourth when Jim Presley singled, went to seond on a throwing error by third baseman George Brett and scored on Ken Phelps' double.

Scott Benfer said applying to be an officer in the Future Farmers of America was a way to repay the organization for the many ways it has helped him improve.

Benfer, a recent high school graduate from Longford, was calmly reviewing his thoughts as he waited to be interviewed for one of six state officer positions in FFA in the Union Thursday afternoon as part of the organization's 58th annual state con-

The three-day convention, which attracted more than 700 bluejacketed state members to the University, also brought in K-State's president-elect Jon Wefald and national FFA President Rick Malir, said Rob Wareham, FFA state sentinel. Malir is a K-State junior on furlough from classes during his presidency.

The more than 6,000 members of the state association comprise the largest agricultural youth organization in the state, said Wareham, a sophomore at Highland Community College. Nationally, the organization has about 434,000 members.

FFA teaches students about the opportunities available in agricultural production and agribusiness, but Wareham and Benfer were quick to point out that FFA goes a step fur-

"It's not just for people interested in ag production. It's available to kids in urban areas too. Many students (in FFA) don't go into agrelated fields. It's a people organization," Wareham said.

Benfer, secretary for FFA's North Central District, said the organization has taught him "skills for life" that include goal setting, etiquette, public speaking and even fine points such as how to correctly knot a necktie.

During the convention, some members participated in prepared and extemporaneous public speaking contests. The winner of each category will go on to compete during the national convention.

Other members opened convention sessions with rocking instrumental renditions of Donna Sommer's "She Works Hard For the Money," as part of the organization's instrumental

The organization also recognized some of its members for their achievements by honoring them as Farmers, Star Agribusinessmen and American Farmers.

New state officers were chosen by the delegates at the convention Saturday night. Benfer will not have the oppotunity to repay FFA in the manner he wanted, but six others will have the chance to serve the organization.

Mary Wilson of Oberlin will serve as the new state FFA president; Cara Nick of Gerard will be the vice president: Anne Krauss of Phillipsburg will serve as secretary; Greg Doud of Mankato will be the new treasurer; Jessica Tajchman of Centre will act as the reporter; and Randall Davis of Louisburg will be the state's new FFA sentinel.

Representative fined after DUI conviction

By The Associated Press

RACINE, Wis. - Rep. Dan Rostenkowski, the House Ways and Means Committee chairman, was fined $555 Monday after pleading guilty to driving drunk while returning from a high school reunion

The Illinois Democrat did not appear in Racine County Traffic and Misdemeanor Court, but was represented by Milwaukee attorney David P. Lowe.

Under state law for first-time drunken driving offenders, Rostenkowski automatically had his Wisconsin driving privileges suspended for six months. He also will not be allowed to drive in Illinois for a year, Lowe said.

The 58-year-old Rostenkowski was arrested June 1 by a Racine County sheriff's deputy, who had stopped him initially for speeding. He was returning from the 40th reunion of his high school class at St. John's Military Academy in Delafield.

Rostenkowski failed portions of a field sobriety test and refused a breath test. In exchange for his plea, a charge of refusing the breath test was dropped.

Rostenkowski was assessed $300 for the drunken driving offense, $200 in a surcharge levied by the state to help pay for drunken driving schools and other programs, $45 as a penalty assessment and $10 in court costs, said Court Commissioner Joe Kremkoski.

At a Chicago news conference last week, Rostenkowski said he would plead guilty to the charge. Accordingly, his June 16 court date was advanced, Lowe said.

"Once he had decided he was going to plead guilty, he wanted to have it taken care of as promptly as possible," Lowe said.

Rostenkowski has 30 days to pay the fine and court costs, Kremkoski said. The congressman also forfeits a $497.50 bond his wife posted to free him after his arrest.

Professional tests mandatory for state teacher certification

Proficiency in the three R's and a degree in education just aren't enough for students who want to become teachers.

Beginning in May, Kansas education students must pass another test: professional knowledge.

Following a nationwide competency testing trend, the Kansas Board of Education now requires education students to pass three sections of the Pre-Professional Skills Test (PPST) and one section of the National Teachers Exam before certification

For the past three years, K-State students in the College of Education have been tested in reading, writing and mathematics by the PPST before they enter the professional education program at any institution under direction of the Kansas Board of Regents, said Candace Hayden, K-State's director of certification.

Students must score a 172 to be ac-

TOPEKA - Jack Brier, Barbara Pomeroy and Bill McDonald are the last declared candidates for Republican governor nomination to file to place their names on the August primary election

Brier, 39, has been secretary of state since 1978 when he was appointed upon retirement of Elwill

A Johnson County native, Brier has spent most of his adult life in Topeka.

In his bid for the governor's office, Brier has teamed with Harland Priddle, 55, who until Saturday was secretary of agriculture. Priddle is a native of Haven and calls Hutchinson home, although he maintains a residence in Topeka.

The past four years, Priddle has overseen the Kansas Board of Agriculture, its 320 employees and $12 million annual budget.

Pomeroy, 47, is a former federal official and instructor at Wichita State University. She is the second woman in state history to seek the governor nomination of a major party.

In 1950, Kathryn K. Hitchins ran for the GOP nomination a field of four. One of her opponents was primary and served as governor in 1951-55. Hitchins finished fourth in the race, taking just 3,684 of the 241,620 votes cast.

Pomeroy, of Whitewater, was an adjunct professor in the Center for Urban Studies at Wichita State before resigning recently to campaign full time. She also has 25 years experinece in a wide variety of federal government and business positions.

Her running mate is Barbara Hale, 47, a political novice who owns Meter Engineering Inc., a petrolium engineering firm in Wichita. Hale was born in Sedan and has lived most her life in Chase and Wichita.

Like Priddle, Pomeroy and Hale, McDonald and his running mate, Betty Laidler of Scranton, are newcomers to the field of elected politics.

McDonald, 41, is from Meriden where he runs a talent scout business. A Salina native, McDonald also has earned a living as a frozen foods salesman.

Laidler, who will be 61 in October, is a student at Washburn University in Topeka studying gerontology. The pair is hoping to avoid paying the $832 filing fee by gathering 4,355 signatures of registered voters which are needed to file by petition.

The freeze in funding could pre-vent manufacture of 210 planes ordered by the Israeli air force, but Israeli and U.S. officials agree it is not likely to stop development of the prototype, which Israel authorized in February 1980. The Mach 1.85 aircraft, with delta wings and round cockpit, has been reported by manufacturing officials to be tailored for the types of missions Israel expects its pilots will perform in the 1990s — covert border crossings, precision strikes against ground targets and rapid, safe Israeli officials estimate the flyaway cost of each Lavi to be $15 million, while the U.S. estimate is $22

The basic cost of the U.S.-made F16 fighter, a mainstay now of Israel's arsenal, is $9.7 million - and $16.5 million with spare parts and support equipment, Israeli officials

They said the first aircraft are scheduled for delivery by the stateowned Israel Aircraft Industry to the Israel air force in 1990.

Stateroom, bookstore to change

By RICH HARRIS Staff Writer

Despite a worsening financial crunch, the Union is expanding its food service and changing the layout of the K-State Union Bookstore, at an estimated cost of nearly $300,000.

The funds come from the Union's repair and replacement account, which is separate from its operating fund. Students contribute to both accounts when paying tuition through a $1.25 line item per student applied to the repair and replacement account. A $12.70 line item is applied to the operating fund.

Walt Smith, Union director, said the food service modifications are overdue. Since its construction in 1970, the food service area has not seen any major renovation.

The food service project, which has been in the works for two years and will cost $75,000, will offer pizza, chicken and Mexican food from yetto-be-constructed counters.

A new ice cream and hot dog counter near the main Stateroom entrance would be open during slow hours. Smith said other minor changes will include a new salad and condiment bar, new drink and milk machines and shifting the cashiers' stands farther south. Ted Thelander, food service consultant from Cleveland, designed the system and suggested the changes. Smith said the Union was making the changes on the assumption that "you have to spend money to make money. "We have had some good years," he said, "but declining enrollment has hit us hard." Current estimates indicate the Union will have an operating deficit of $80,000 this year and $145,000 next year. Smith cited declining enrollment and a static line item level as the primary reasons for the deficit. The Union operations line item has been the same since 1977, while University tuition has more than doubled, Smith said.

"We expect to go before Student Senate and ask for a fee increase next year," Smith said. "We hope for a $5 increase."

Another change will be the flipflopping of the two Union Bookstore levels. Textbooks, currently on the lower floor, will be moved to the upper level. This will allow visitors to the Union using the south parking lot entrance to see gifts and souvenirs offered by the Union, rather than books only.

Seven file for governor's job

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Filings by three Republicans seeking that party's nomination for governor highlighted the final hours Tuesday of the registration period for candidates seeking to place their names on the fall election ballots.

With the filings of Jack H. Brier, Barbara Pomeroy and Bill D. McDonald, all seven declared candidates for GOP gubernatorial nomination secured a place on the Aug. 5 primary election ballot.

Meanwhile, Lt. Gov. Tom Docking remained unopposed and is assured of being the Democratic nominee in the Nov. 4 general election.

Brier, Pomeroy and McDonald slipped in under the wire, along with a host of candidates for the U.S. Senate, Congress, various state offices and the Kansas House

Brier, 39, was the first to file in the secretary of state's office, where he has reigned since 1978.

About 30 members of his staff in the secretary of state's office watched as Brier and his running mate, Harland E. Priddle, 55, of Hutchinson, filled out the necessary forms and paid the $832 filing fee.

'It's going great,' Brier said after filing. "Our campaign is exactly on track and where we want it to be. It's fully consistent with our plan.'

Brier renewed his call for his six opponents to limit their spending to $350,000 and said he was disturbed that his proposal was being ignored

"Some of the candidates have not even taken the time to answer my call for a voluntary spending limit,' he said. However, Brier said he was not scared by the huge sums of money being tossed around by other

"Do I look scared?" he asked. McDonald, 41, a talent scout and promoter from Meriden, followed Brier and paid cash to get his name on the ballot. He and Betty Ruth Laidler, 60, of Scranton said they could win the governor's office on a shoe-string budget and called for elimination of waste in government. McDonald said the first thing he would do, if elected, is to cut the $65,000 annual salary of the governor by "at least 10 percent." The public has embraced the McDonald-Laidler ticket, he said, and predicted a victory for his team in August.

However, he acknowledged that he can't compete with the spending of his opponents, some of whom have budgeted $700,000 or more for the primary. McDonald said he'd raised enough to cover the filing fee with a few dollars to spare. But he said the total did not exceed $2,000.

"I've heard about the excessive money being spent in the campaign," McDonald said. "To get exposure, we're going to travel across the state, to every county. We have a lot to offer."

Pomeroy, 47, of Whitewater, and her nominee for lieutenant governor, Barbara Hale, also 47, of Wichita, were the last team to file.

A former federal official and instructor at Wichita State University, Pomeroy is trying to become the first woman in Kansas history to win the governor nomination of a major par-

Pomeroy has 25 years experience in a wide variety of federal government and business positions, including a 51/2 year stint as comptroller in the federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms in Washington. She refused to answer questions about her running mate or strategy.

A native of Hutchinson, Pomeroy holds degrees from the University of Kansas and Southern Cal. Here is a list of the teams running for governor: Democrats -Lt. Gov. Tom Docking of Wichita and Junction City newspaper publisher John G. Montgomery. Republicans

-Secretary of State Jack H. Brier of Topeka and Harland E. Priddle of Hutchinson. -House Speaker Mike Hayden, of Atwood, and Sen. Jack Walker, of Overland Park. -Wichita business executive Larry Jones and Senate Majority Leader Bud Burke, of Leawood. -Pittsburg pizza magnate Gene Bicknell and Sen. Eric Yost, of -Andover attorney Richard Peckham and Austin Kent Vincent, a Topeka attorney.

Pomeroy -Barbara Whitewater, a former university instructor, and Barbara L. Hale, a Wichita businesswoman.

-Bill D. McDonald, a Meriden talent promoter, and Betty Ruth Laidler, of Scranton and a student at Washburn University.

NOW files lawsuit to stop 'terrorism'

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The National Organization for Women said Tuesday it has filed a lawsuit against three prominent anti-abortion activists to try to stop what it called "a reign of terror" against abortion clinics.

The announcement came just hours after a pipe bomb ripped though an abortion clinic in Wichita, Kan., the latest act of violence in an escalating war over the emotional

The class-action lawsuit, filed Monday in Wilmington, Del., claims the anti-abortion leaders violate federal antitrust laws by inciting their followers to harass and intimidate abortion clinics out of business

"These fanatics have instituted a reign of terror against women nationwide," NOW President Eleanor Cutri Smeal said at a news conference.

The Justice Department has declined to investigate abortionrelated violence, saying there is no nationwide link to the 34 bombings and 27 arsons at abortion facilities recorded since 1977 by the National Abortion Federation. The federation counted 45 acts of violence in 1982, 54 in 1983, 173 in 1984 and 224 in 1985. The acts ranged from death threats to vandalism to bombings.

The Wichita bombing occurred late Monday night. No one was in jured. "People have certainly said they would shut us down," the clinic's physician, George Tiller, Anti-abortion activists have disavowed any connection to the nationwide violence.

The three defendants, whom Smeal called "terrorists," are Joe Scheidler of Chicago, Joan Andrews of Newark, Del., and John Patrick Ryan of St. Louis. Also named in the suit are Scheidler's Pro-Life Action League and Ryan's Pro-Life Direct Scheidler, picketing an abortion conference in Kansas City, issued a statement saying the NOW lawsuit "is part of a pro-abortion conspiracy to harass the pro-life movement. It will not slow down our efforts. We will simply increase our activities until every unborn child regains his right to life."

"It's a witchhunt," Ryan said. "It's meant to intimidate us, to harass us, to tie us up in court. They admit they've not been able to stop us at the local level. I think that's a tribute to the local activists all over the country. People are sick and tired of these abortionists killing babies in their communities.

Andrews, who is in jail in Pensacola, Fla., awaiting trial later this month in connection with a violent anti-abortion demonstration there in March, said lawsuits won't stop her.

"What they would have to do is put us in jail for the rest of our lives or until the killing stops," she said. "These three are national leaders," Smeal said. "We know organizations are spearheading the day-in, day-out harassment campaign. The lawsuit seeks a federal court injunction to prevent the three from 'driving women's health centers that perform abortions out of business through a pattern of concerted, unlawful activity.' The Southern Poverty Law Center of Montgomery, Ala., is representing NOW and two clinics - the Pensacola Ladies Center and the Delaware Women's Health Organization - in the lawsuit. The suit was filed in Delaware because it is "the spot Mr. Scheidler has declared will be the first state to be free of abortions," attorney Richard Cohen said.

The unusual antitrust approach is being patterned after a successful SPLC lawsuit that in 1982 protected Vietnamese fishermen in Texas against the Ku Klux Klan's attempts to drive them out of business.

Faculty Senate studies student health policy, Lafene hospital closing

By The Collegian Staff

The closing of the Lafene Student Health Center hospital for the summer semester, with no reduction in the summer health fee, was discussed by Faculty Senate Tuesday after-

George E. Ham, professor of agronomy, said a "gravely ill" graduate student couldn't be treated at Lafene because the hospital section had been closed for the summer. Instead of paying $150 a day at Lafene's hospital, the student is paying $400 a day for care at a local hospital, he said.

Ham and other faculty senators were concerned because the decision to close Lafene's hospital has not been reported to the Faculty Senate. There has been no notification in the Collegian or other campus publications, they said.

Ham also pointed out there has been no reduction in student health fees for the summer, yet services available to the students have been reduced.

Student Body President Steve Johnson said that during past summer semesters, Lafene has been pulling money out of its reserve fund to keep the hospital open. Approximately 1.5 students use the Lafene hospital in the summer, and it is not economically feasible for the hospital to remain open, he said. Johnson said the dietary center at Lafene will also be closed this sum-

During discussion, it was brought out that student supplemental health insurance policies for Lafene do not cover medical care at local for Student Development, said a new student insurance policy by Blue Cross and Blue Shield should be available by next fall. The new policy should cover care at local hospitals,

The Senate agreed to include the Lafene hospital closing on the executive committee agenda for further discussion.

In other business, the Senate amended the May 1986 list of candidates for degrees and approved the amended list. The executive committee will choose a replacement for Charles Reagan, professor of philosophy, as chairman of the Faculty Senate Committee on University Planning. The position became vacant when Reagan accepted a position in president-elect Jon Wefald's cabinet.

Art panel recognizes finalists

By ANGELA O'HARA Staff Writer

A little luck is what one Manhattan artist said helped years of dedication

"Why me?" wondered Margo Kren, assistant professor of art, after being recognized over so many other "really fine artists" as a finalist in the statewide Kansas Arts Commission visual arts competition. Luck is part of the process in art competitions, she said.

Kren, James Munce, associate professor of art, and Mary F. Palffy, former instructor of art, are three of 44 finalists selected from 212 Kansas artists submitting slides of their work to the juried competition.

In February, the Mulvane Art

Center gallery at Washburn University, Topeka, will exhibit some finalists' work in lieu of the annual Kansas Arts Commission "Kansas" competition.

Kren said she uses "personal imagery that's expressive" in her acrylic paintings, some of which she submitted to the Kansas competition. Kren said her work varies from representational to abstract.

Since 1980, the University has awarded Kren two faculty research awards in mono-prints, what she called a "very supportive gesture." She also received a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts in An artist for 25 years, Munce won a purchase award from the Boston Printmakers earlier this year. In 1984, he received a fellowship from the Mid-America Art Alliance.

"I was very pleased," he said of being named a finalist. Munce submitted prints and drawings of "mostly figurative work, with some images based on St. Francis, and some land-Palffy said she submitted paintings, prints and a drawing to the competition, one of which was a lifesize oil on linen depicting a cow. She has focused her work on "primarily agricultural concerns.

Some of her pieces combine an intaglio (engraved) process with mono-prints and collage drawings. Palffy said she has had work displayed in 50 to 75 exhibitions.

Last year, Palffy taught drawing classes at the University. She said she will continue spending her time printing, painting and exhibiting for the next two years while her husband finishes his education.

Later this month, Dodge Thompson, chief curator of exhibitions for the National Gallery of Art in Washington, will come to Kansas to view the works of the 44 finalists. He will select six to 12 artists to display their work as part of "A Kansas Collection" at the National Museum for Women in the Arts in Washington.

The collection will be the first of the state exhibitions in the museum when it opens in April. The opening of the gallery is expected to receive worldwide attention.

"We're very lucky Kansas is the first (state)," Kren said. "Kansas takes the leadership there."

Highway construction begins with ceremony

By TONY CARBAJO City/Recreation Editor

Gov. John Carlin was in Manhattan Tuesday morning to participate in groundbreaking activities for the Southern Arterial.

The Southern Arterial, designed as a four-lane trafficway to run south of Yuma Street along the former Rock Island Railroad tracks, will enable Manhattan to look forward to "the kind of future you want," Carlin said.

"Having been a part of this community in a number of ways for a number of years, I am pleased to be with you today," he said. "Once again, you as a community are doing what needs to be done to succeed."

Carlin said that in his eight years as governor, few chances have been available for him to make presentations in regard to new construction. He said Kansas has not had the resources to expand, and highway resources secured from the Legislature were put into maintenance to protect existing

Only a few projects, including the Southern Arterial, have been able to be selected by his administration, Carlin said.

"A great deal of credit ought to go to you folks here in Manhattan," Carlin continued. "Day after day, month after month, year after year you persisted. There were times when I thought your city manager was on my staff - at least it seemed that way in terms of the frequency with which I met with him, or saw him, or was reminded by him that there was this project that needed to be attended to.

Carlin said the initial funding source for the highway project ran out of funds, thus requiring the project to be given a second, third and fourth run at financing.

"But, it was your persistence, your patience, your dedication and of course the fact that you had a good project," Carlin said, "that came together to make it all possible."

The project is expected to be completed in the summer of 1987, or in approximately one year. The arterial is being built by the Smoky Hill Construction Co. of Salina.

Student to attend Moscow institute

By KELLY LAMBORN Collegian Reporter

Robert K. Dubois, senior in milling science and management, is planning to spend seven weeks in the Soviet Union to study Russian this summer.

Dubois won a $1,550 scholarship from the American Council of Teachers of Russian, and will be studying at the Pushkin Institute in Moscow as part of an international exchange program.

Although Dubois' primary interest is in milling science, he is also working toward a dual degree in modern languages for French and Russian.

"The modern languages was something I thought was more for my own enjoyment at first," said Dubois. "Later, I decided to integrate the two areas.'

Dubois has already spent two summers abroad in France on internships. In 1984, he spent two weeks working with a manufacturer of grain and flour laboratory testing equipment in Paris. He then worked at a flour mill in a small city 60 miles south of Paris. In 1985, Dubois worked at a flour research laboratory in France near the Belgium border.

"The ultimate, if you're a language student, is going abroad, developing your language skills and exposing yourself to the culture," Dubois said.

His experiences in France made him want to experience life in the same manner in the Soviet Union; mingling with the people, visiting the museums and seeing how the natives really live beyond the tourist traps.

Dubois will go to Philadelphia Monday for an orientation session. Tuesday, he and approximately 100 other students from the United States will be bused to New York. From there they will fly to Helsinki, Finland, and then on to Moscow. The students will study for six weeks at the Pushkin Institute. The seventh week will include tours of Leningrad and several other cities. Dubois said the six weeks of study will be very formal, with classes Monday through Saturday. Wednesdays are to be reserved for excursions in and around Moscow. The classes will include Russian conversation, grammar, phonetics and lectures on contemporary Russian literature and culture, said Walter Kolonosky, associate professor of modern languages and K-State's director of study abroad.

Joseph Hajda, professor of political science, said the biggest differences Dubois will probably notice in the Soviet Union are the living standards and mass media. The Soviet standard of living is lower and the media are licensed, thus controlled, by the government and Communist Party.

Dubois is restricted from taking certain items with him this summer, including more than two pairs of new blue jeans. Hajda said this is probably meant to prevent the students from selling any jeans on the black market.

"I can't take anything with me that might be considered subversive, like American newspapers or magazines, such as Time or Newsweek," Dubois said.

Dubois started applying for study abroad in the spring of 1985. He said he had to fill out many pages and forms on his educational and personal background and had to pass a physical examination. Next, he wrote an essay in English and another in Russian. The last step was a 21/2-hour Russian proficiency ex-

Dubois plans to spend time mingling with the citizens of Moscow to learn more about the people of Soviet Union. He also wants to visit some bookstores.

Yale president now leads NL

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - A. Bartlett Giamatti, the retiring president of Yale University who once said the only thing he wanted to be head of was the American League, was named National League president today.

Giamatti, a Renaissance scholar and an avid Boston Red Sox fan, was introduced at a news conference by Chub Feeney, who is retiring after 17 years as National League president.

The 48-year-old educator, who has no experience in baseball, was considered a candidate for commissioner two years ago before owners selected Peter Ueberroth.

"People of letters have always gravitated to sport. I've been a lover of baseball, I even tried to write about it. I always found it the most satisfying and nourishing of games outside of literature," said Giamatti, whose resignation from Yale is effective June 30. Benno C. Schmidt Jr. has been named his successor.

Giamatti announced his resigna-

Divers find victim of drowning

From staff and wire reports

The body of Erin Messing, 12, Overland Park, was recovered Tuesday morning from the Blue River near Tuttle Creek Lake, northeast of Manhattan, according to the Riley County Police Department.

The girl disappeared Saturday while on a canoeing trip with members of a group supervised by the Kansas City First Ward Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints.

Lt. Steve French of the RCPD said Messing and another youth stopped at a sand bar for a break to wade in the water. He said Messing and the other girl were swept away while playing in the water. The other girl, identified as Maria Rodriguez, was rescued shortly after the incident, but Messing disappeared.
French said Messing's body was found at 8:50 a.m. Tuesday, about 50 yards from where she was last seen Saturday. French said there were "never less than 12" divers and searchers looking for the girl.

Motorists to navigate new routes

By The Collegian Staff

Manhattan streets will have a new look beginning this week. Jerry Petty, city engineer, said considerable changes in traffic routing are planned due to construction of the Manhattan Town Center

Among these changes, Kansas Highway 177 will continue off the viaduct over the Kansas River, down Pierre Street to Juliette Avenue. The highway will then extend northward on Juliette Avenue to Leavenworth Street, which now extends eastward to Tuttle Creek Boulevard until the Southern Arterial is completed, he said.

Petty said Leavenworth Street will continue to connect with Tuttle Creek Boulevard after the arterial project is completed.

Both phases of construction of the Southern Arterial are scheduled for completion by the spring of 1987, said Chuck Williams of the city engineer's office. But after completion, K-177 will not return to its former route.

Motorists will need to continue off the viaduct south to Third Street to the Southern Arterial and then back under the viaduct to connect with Tuttle Creek Boulevard, Williams said.

Permanent changes in Tuttle Creek Boulevard are the result of the closing of Poyntz Avenue from Third Street eastward due to the mall construction.

At Yale, Giamatti started with a $2 million budget deficit, then balanced the budget in four years. He effectively eliminated 50 faculty positions without layoffs through a hiring freeze, said John A. Wilkinson, university secretary

In addition, Yale's alumni contributions almost tripled from 1977-78 to 1984-85, from $9.5 million to $26.3

Giamatti was confronted with a strike in 1984, when more than 2,600 clerical and technical workers walk-

In 1981, he spoke against what he said was a failure to keep sports in perspective at Yale. The school does not offer athletic scholarships, although it recruits athletes.

Giamatti graduated from Yale in 1960 and in 1964 received a doctorate in comparative literature from the university. He joined the English Department in 1967 after teaching at Princeton and New York University. He has published five books.

Feeney succeeded Warren Giles as NL president in 1970. The American League president is Bobby Brown.

Design course analyzes Bostonian architecture

By The Collegian Staff

Thirteen K-State students will participate in an eight-week design course sponsored by the College of Architecture and Design June 16 through Aug. 8 in Boston.

The course, which will review the structure and development of Boston, will be taught at The Boston Architecture Center near the Massachusetts Institute of Technology campus in Cambridge,

The program will examine the urban framework, architectural objects and public spaces of Boston in order to further understand the urban environment, said Eugene Kremer, professor of architecture and coordinator of the summer pro-

"Students will learn a variety of ways to analyze architecture and apply ideas to design proposals for improvements or changes to the ar-chitecture studied," Kremer said.

The program will be organized as one interrelated design study with all the students working together on it. The central element in the program will be the studio. Several design teams will be working cooperatively during much of the course. The success of the program will depend on their efforts, he said.

Most of the analytical work in the program will be based on material gathered from first-hand observations in the field. Along with the field work, seminars will provide a forum for presentations and discussion of material concerning the studio work, he said.

The urban framework of Boston, historically significant yet always changing, will provide a unique laboratory for the students participating in the program, Kremer

Teen-age vigilantes receive prison term

By The Associated Press

FORT WORTH, Texas - Five members of the Legion of Doom, a student vigilante group that sought to eliminate petty crime and drug abuse at a high school by intimidating suspected wrong-doers, have been sent to jail.

The five also were sentenced Monday to probation, along with two other members of the group which painted swastikas, bombed a car and killed a cat during the spree last year at Paschal High.

State District Judge Don Leonard also ordered Legion of Doom members, including student leaders and star athletes, to pay about $8,000 in restitution, write 1,000-word reports on the "value of probation" and spend up to 200 hours in community service work. Four of the youths, including David E. Norman, 19, were sentenced to 30 days in jail and 10 years probation. Leonard described Norman, who was charged with possession of a prohibited weapon, criminal mischief and arson, as capable of being "president of the United States or dictator of some small South American country."

A fifth youth was sentenced to 14 days in jail and 10 years' probation. Two others received five years' pro-

Leonard's sentences were based on 10 incidents that involved 17 felonies and 16 misdemeanors by nine current and former Paschal students. Besides the seven sentenced Monday, another involved was a juvenile and the one more was charged on a misdemeanor, the judge said. Those last two cases are still pending.

"My main concern was there had been a lot of talk that they were some way indirectly justified in what they did," Leonard said. "But I wanted to quash that."

Leonard said the two who received no jail time embarked only on one or two of the group's escapades that included the firing of shots at a house and the passing of notes signed with swastikas.

"If you're going to put them on probation - and that's what everybody recommended, from the grand jury to the victims and the probation office - I at least wanted to give those four the maximum jail time possible," he said.

The defendants were indicted on graduation day last May on 33 charges stemming from a series of crimes between Jan. 9 and March 24,

None of the defendants will have a criminal conviction record if he complies with terms of the probation and violate no other laws, Leonard said. If those terms are broken, they could face criminal records or a prison

Dole suggests program continue shuttle flights

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - As Congress begins to review the report of the Challenger commission, Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., is calling for lawmakers to "hold our fire" and instead to work to restore confidence in the space program.

"Before we rush to judgments and everybody starts pouncing on NASA or finding fault with this person or that person, we want to keep in mind that this is an oustanding program and it's a matter of great pride to all Americans," Dole said Monday on the Senate floor.

The Kansas Republican recommended that the National Aeronautics and Space Administration begin production of a fourth space shuttle to replace the Challenger, saying its loss "should not be allowed to blur our vision in the future, nor should it sour our taste for discovery."

Today, committees in the Senate and House open hearings on the final report of the presidential commission that investigated the shuttle

Dole said the report would lead to a "number of major changes" in NASA, but suggested that members of Congress should "hold our fire" until there is time to study the commission's findings.

Ecology professor will be missed

When Lloyd C. Hulbert, longtime professor in the Division of Biology, died May 23, the biology field lost a man who had provided many years of service to the study of wildlife.

Hulbert, besides doing research in ecology within the department, taught a variety of classes from Principles of Biology to graduate courses in Environmental Impact to Toxicology in the School of Veterinary Medicine.

Even with all of Hulbert's responsibilities within the department, he is best known for his work with the Konza Prairie Research Natural Area, located seven miles south of Manhattan. As director of the 8,616-acre Konza Prairie, Hulbert was instrumental in helping the research area become the largest site in the country for the longterm study of the original prairie and its habitat.

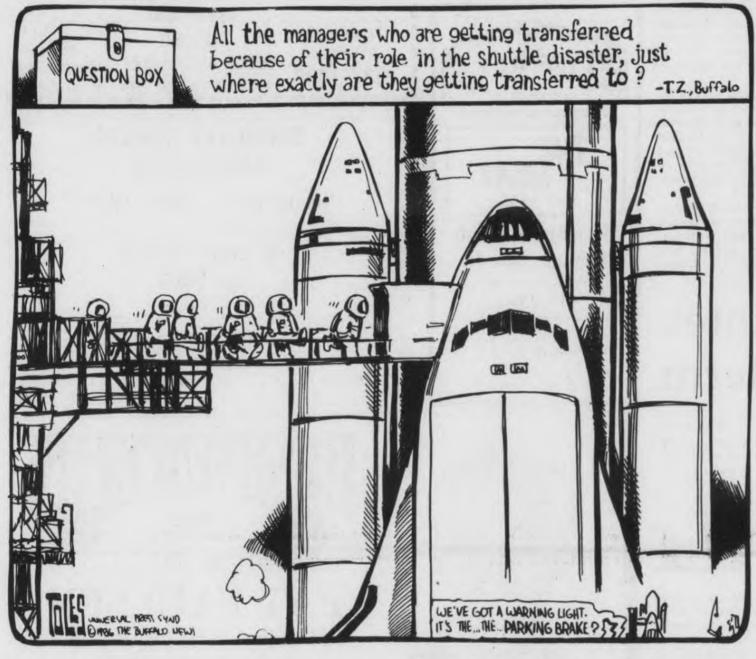

Hulbert was part of Konza's inception, traveling to Washington, D.C., in 1970 to try and gain support from government agencies to help fund the project. Konza became a reality through the funding of The Nature Conservancy, an achievement that may have never happened without Hulbert.

Hulbert had a special love for wildlife and conveyed that in his work with Konza. He also aimed his work toward benefiting man in its understanding of the prairie ecosystem.

He will be remembered not only for his work with Konza but as an excellent scholar and a teacher highly regarded by his students and peers.

Rebuilding key to NASA's future

What began as an inquiry into a single, catastrophic event has led to disclosures of blatant mismanagement by both NASA and the agency's suppliers. And the recommended solutions are not "quick-fixes."

President Reagan, after formally receiving the report, said, "We'll simply do what has to be done to make our space program safe and reliable and a renewed source of pride to America...just as the crew of the space shuttle Challenger would have wanted us to."

Basically, the report instructs the space agency to reconstruct its program, not only in management but also in its design systems.

The commission, with former Secretary of State William Rogers as chairman, urged NASA to report to the White House by June, 1987, progress toward compliance with the recommenda-

The commission also reported finding no evidence of White House pressure on NASA to launch Challenger the morning of the state-of-the-union address.

The commission's findings make it clear that NASA's July 1987 target for resumed launching will not be feasible. Future actions by the space agency will also be under much more severe scrutiny than in the past. The "space race" must not be allowed to serve as an excuse for inadequacies that - as the entire world is now painfully aware of — can result in deaths.

Perhaps pioneer astronaut and

Sen. John Glenn, D-Ohio, summed up the situation best when he said. "The mindset of a few people in key positions at NASA had changed from an optimistic and super safety-conscious 'can do' attitude, when I was in the program, to an arrogant 'can't-fail' attitude....'

Another recommendation that may help delegate decisionmaking responsibilities is to begin including contractors and astronauts in crucial launch deci-

Now the nation must use the commission's report to restore the agency to its original status. It may be a time-consuming and expensive process, but the alternative is unacceptable.

Independence worthwhile struggle

This summer will be one gigantic experiment.

For the first time in my 21 years, I have packed my bedclothes, cooking utensils and luggage and journeyed to Manhattan for eight fun-filled weeks in an apartment.

When my family first heard my decision, they feared I was insane. Convinced that adding the pressures of housework to school work would be a severe mistake, they tried to persuade me that I should spend a relaxing summer at home.

I pointed out that I wouldn't have a leisurely summer at home because I'd be doing the housework. Besides, there was nothing new or exciting about cooking the same mundane meals, making the same old beds or vacuuming the same worn carpet. If I was going to have to do housework, I decided that I had nothing to lose by combining this chore with a venture into the supposedly grueling world of K-State summer school. Chattering happily to my friends about this new undertaking, I convinced myself that this would be one of the most enjoyable experiences of my life. But as the moving date neared, I became apprehensive about accepting these new responsibilities.

The past two years I hadn't had to worry about the basic tasks of housekeeping such

as cooking meals, cleaning the bathroom or grocery shopping because those services had been provided by my living groups. Now I would have these tasks to complete in addition to finishing my lessons

My family tried to make the transition to student/maid as painless as possible by stockpiling supplies that I could take with me. We raided the pantry, scanned the supermarket shelves and combed the attic of our house for anything that was remotely edible or useful.

With all this advance preparation, my roommate and I still had to buy cookware and enough food to make a "survival menu." As of now, our diet has mainly consisted of hamburgers or tuna salad sandwiches, green beans, fresh fruit and milk. (Such extravagances as chocolate chip cookies will have to wait until we save more coupons.)

In addition to subsitence problems, we've had to deal with the red tape of moving in. Persuading Southwestern Bell to give us phone service, mailing change-of-address postcards for our subscriptions and rearranging the furniture have been some of our more memorable tasks.

I may paint a rather dismal picture, but I've found three advantages to living here as opposed to staying home. The apartment has only four rooms to clean as opposed to 10 rooms at home. I can also earn six hours of credit and still have an overabundance of freedom. In the long run, this means less housework, fewer semester hours and more independence.

Even though serving a dual role of housekeeper and student has meant more headaches, I'm glad I accepted the challenge. This change in living styles has exposed me to new situations and made me shoulder responsibilities I had taken for

Ultimately, this experiment should give me a solid education in coping with stress and dealing with practical problems in real

If you ever have the opportunity to break away from your usual humdrum lifestyle and sample something different, take it. The experience could be invaluable.

Diverted Egyptian airliner crashes in Cairo

CAIRO, Egypt — An Egyptian airliner that had been diverted to Alexandria because of sandstorms crashed Tuesday as it was returning to Cairo, and at least 20 people were killed, officials reported.

Officials said there were six survivors but one died later in a hospital. The government's Middle East News Agency said the twin-engine Fokker-27, operated by Air Sinai, had been cleared to land at the Cairo International Airport when it slammed into the courtyard of a construction company and burst into flames at about 7:30 p.m. (11:30 a.m. EDT).

The plane crashed about a mile from an amusement park jammed with people celebrating the final day of a four-day religious holiday.

Officials said they had no information on nationalities of the victims but most were believed to be Egyptians.

Chernobyl residents resist evacuation, hide

MOSCOW - A Soviet newspaper said today two old women hid to avoid being forced from their homes after the Chernobyl nuclear accident. The report said some evacuees secretly were returning home to feed their animals.

An 18-mile zone around the Ukrainian nuclear power plant, including the communities of Pripyat and Chernobyl, was evacuated because of radiation released after an explosion and fire at the plant. At least 92,000 people were evacuated.

The newspaper Sovietskaya Rossiya reported that a woman in her 70s and another in her 80s hid to avoid evacuation and were discovered after they emerged from their separate hiding places at the end of May.

The two women were hospitalized, the paper said, but their conditions were not reported. Their home towns were not identified.

The newspaper denied reports of widespread looting of homes in the evacuated zone. "Practically, there was not a single case of theft from empty houses," the newspaper said today in denying the rumors concerning Pripyat and the town of Chernobyl.

Officials have not indicated when residents of Chernobyl and Priyat will be allowed to go home.

At least 26 people have died and hundreds of others are hospitalized with radiation sickness because of the accident.

Major military exercise to evaluate troops

WASHINGTON - Roughly 35,000 U.S. servicemen will participate in a major exercise next month designed to test their ability to operate in a desert environment, the Pentagon said Tuesday.

The exercise, staged every two years and code-named Gallant Eagle, will begin July 25 and extend through Aug. 3, the Pentagon said.

The exercise is sponsored by the U.S. Central Command, one of six so-called unified commands. The Central Command is responsible for military readiness in a broad area that extends from Kenya in eastern Africa northward to Egypt and then eastward through the Arabian peninsula and Pakistan on the Asian continent.

The Pentagon said Gallant Eagle 86 will be conducted at 10 military installations in California and Utah, with most of the ground operations taking place at the National Training Center at Fort Irwin, Calif., and the Marine Corps Air Ground Combat Center at Twentynine Palms, Calif.

Elements of each of the four armed services will participate, along with units from the Reserves and National Guard, the Pentagon added, "and air support for the exercise will be staged from several airfields spread throughout the Southwestern United States.

"The purpose of Gallant Eagle 86 is to provide a simulated combat environment for training, planning and execution of joint military operations in order to evaluate the U.S. Central Command headquarters and portions of its multi-service forces in tactical operations in a desert environment," the Pentagon said.

USDA estimates winter wheat yields down

WASHINGTON - The Agriculture Department said Tuesday that 1986 winter wheat production is estimated at 1.58 billion bushels, down 14 percent from last year's harvest of 1.83 billion bushels and 1 percent less than forecast a month ago. Officials said the average yield, based on indications as of June 1, was estimated at 36.8 bushels per acre, compared with last year's 38.1 bushels per harvested acre and 37.4 bushels indicated in May.

Farmers are expected to have about 42.8 million acres for harvest this year, down from almost 48 million in 1985.

Winter wheat is planted in the fall and harvested the following summer. It makes up about three-fourths of total U.S. wheat production.

No 1986 production estimates for spring wheat, corn and other spring-planted crops were included. Those will be issued by USDA later in the growing season.

Greenhouse effect may lead to extinction

WASHINGTON - A dramatic loss of ozone over Antarctica proves the greenhouse effect is real and presages a gradual warming of the Earth that threatens floods, drought, human misery in a few years and - if not checked - eventual extinction of the human species, scientists warned Tuesday.

"I believe global warming is inevitable; it's only a question of magnitude and time," Robert Watson told the Senate Environment subcommittee on environmental pollution.

'We can expect significant changes in climate in the next few decades," said Watson, predicting that if nothing is done to slow ozone-depleting air pollution, temperatures around the world could rise as much as 10 degrees

Watson is director of the upper atmospheric program for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

James Hansen, director of NASA's Goddard Institute for Space Studies, said global temperatures should be nearly 2 degrees higher in 20 years, "which is about the warmest the earth has been in the last 100,000 years."

Hansen said the average U.S. temperature has risen from 1 to 2 degrees since 1958 and is predicted to increase an additional 3 or 4 degrees sometime between 2010 and

Pavarotti to host PBS specials for youths

PHILADELPHIA - Italian tenor Luciano Pavarotti says seeing himself on television with younger singers is a stark reminder that his own career in opera and in concert began a quarter century ago.

"I am older," he said as he began to discuss the young graduates of The Opera Company of Philadelphia-Luciano Pavarotti International Voice Competition who appear with him in a series of taped television specials. The first is "A Pavarotti Salute to Youth" concert performance of the Verdi Requiem tonight on public televi-

Giuseppe Verdi wrote the requiem, his only masterwork not intended for the stage, to honor the memory of his friend, the Italian poet, patriot and author Alessandro Manzoni. The work premiered May 22, 1874, at the Church of San Marco in Milan.

For the performance, Philadelphia's 17,000-seat Spectrum, home to the Philadelphia Flyers hockey team and the 76ers basketball team, was transformed into a cathedral-like concert hall.

The soloists include Pavarotti at tenor, American soprano Susan Dunn, Hungarian mezzo-soprano Ildiko Komlosi and bass Paata Burchuladze, a member of the Georgian Opera in Tbilisi, U.S.S.R. A 350-voice chorus, an orchestra and conductor Lorin Maazel complete the production.

The tenor part is hardly a starring one. But Pavarotti said that's why the Verdi Requiem was selected.

"I wanted people to hear these young singers as they performed what is absolutely the most difficult music to do," he said.

Royals out-slug Mariners to halt three-game losing skid

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - George Brett went 5-for-5 and Jorge Orta rapped four hits and drove in three runs, sparking an 18-hit attack Tuesday night that led the Kansas City Royals over the Seattle Mariners 9-5.

Brett, who had a double and four singles, had his fifth career five-hit game. He scored three runs and drove in one. Orta hit two doubles and two singles.

The loss broke Seattle's sevengame winning streak at Royals Stadium dating back to Sept. 9, 1984. The start of Tuesday night's game was delayed one hour and 57 minutes because of rain.

Reliever Steve Farr, 4-1, inherited a bases-loaded situation with two outs in the fifth and ended the inning by striking out Danny Tartabull. Farr gave up three hits, struck out five and walked none.

The loser was reliever Milt Wilcox, 0-8. Brett and Orta sandwiched doubles around Frank White's RBI single in the sixth, increasing the Royals' lead to 9-5.

The Mariners jumped on rookie starter Scott Bankhead for two runs in the first. Harold Reynolds was hit by a pitch and John Moses singled him to second, then they executed a double steal. Alvin Davis drove in a run with a groundout and Jim Presley followed with Lonnie Smith singled in the Royals' first, stole second and scored on Brett's single. The Royals tied it 2-2 in the second on Orta's first double and Steve Balboni's RBI single.

Kearney and Moses singled in the third and rode home on Davis' double to put Seattle up 4-2. Smith singled leading off the bottom of the third, stole second and scored on Rudy Law's single. Wilcox relieved starter Bill Swift and gave up a single to Brett and an RBI single to Orta. Balboni hit a sacrifice fly to give the Royals a 5-4

Dave Henderson led off the Seattle sixth with his 10th home run.

Motley sent down to Omaha

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Slumping outfielder Darryl Motley will have to "hit his way back" if he wants to return to the Kansas City Royals, and Manager Dick Howser thinks he can do it.

Motley, 26, was sent to the team's Triple A farm club at Omaha after Monday night's game against the Seattle Mariners. Motley, a righthanded hitter who had been platooning in right field with Rudy Law, wasn't in the lineup Monday even though the Mariners started lefthander Mark Langston.

After the game, Motley got the bad news at a closed-door meeting with Howser, and soon was accepting condolences from his teammates.

"I don't have much to say," said Motley, who had slumped to a .196 average. "I'm not here anymore. I'm just going to do what I have to do. I've always done it the hard way. It's just another mountain to climb. I'll be OK. I always have been."

Howser said he was trying to "shake him up" with the demotion to Omaha, and expressed hope that his stay there is temporary.

"Most young players work and get back to the big leagues," said the Royals manager. "There is a good opportunity for him in this organization. The tough part is going down. He's going to have to hit his way back to the majors. We know he can do it. But it's not easy. He was projected as our every-day right fielder. He's got to put it all together."

After hitting .284 with 15 homers for the Royals in 1984, his first full season in the majors, Motley struggled at the plate last year and his average fell to .222. Still, he had 17 home runs and his homer in the seventh game of the World Series was the game-winning RBI.

To replace Motley, the Royals called up Mike Brewer, another 26-yearold right-handed-hitting outfielder who was hitting .280 with five homers, 35 runs batted in and 14 stolen bases for Omaha.

Motley began the season as Kansas City's starting right fielder, winning the job he had shared last year with Pat Sheridan, who was released in spring training. But as his bat became less and less productive, he started platooning with Law.

Motley had driven in 12 runs and hit five homers for the Royals, two of them in one game on May 9, when he raised his average to .253. Since then he had only eight hits in 66 attempts and was without a hit in his last nine

"I'm trying to get him started, and I'm trying to get us started," said Howser. "It's pretty obvious that he's sliding, if you've been watching the games. He's too good a player to be floundering the way he is. He's not going to do it sitting next to me."

Basketball coach Lon Kruger prepares to shoot a free throw Tuesday afternoon as part of a bet with Tyler Olson, Topeka, for a Coke. Olson is participating in the Lon Kruger basketball camp being held at Ahearn Field House.

New Wildcat coach settles in

Kruger works on first camps

By TIM FITZGERALD Staff Writer

Even Lon Kruger admits running his first basketball camp as the new K-State coach isn't exactly work. Then again, Kruger thinks almost all of his duties as a basketball coach are not well described as "work." "I don't call anything I do work - coaching basketball and being with young people isn't work," Kruger said. "I don't lay any claim to it being work."

The camp's first session was last week and the final session is underway this week. The two weeks might just be the first chance Kruger and his two assistants, Dana Altman and Greg Grensing, have had a chance to sit still in the same place for any amount of time.

The three jumped right into the business of recruiting basketball players for next year's Wildcat team from the first day they were hired. They have been going north, south, east and west looking for new basket-

"All the pressurized recruiting is over. Now you settle into the summer recruiting routine, run your camp and look at other campers (we are interested in recruiting) across the country," Kruger said.

"(Summer time) is a little more fun. It is more enjoyable than the rest of the year. But, it is going to be exciting to get the (team players) back," he said. "There has been some good memories here (Ahearn Field House). They have all been positive and highly memorable."

Kruger is a happy man. Not only is he pleased with the recent news that Norris Coleman will be returning to K-State, but his first camp has attracted more than 170 boys ages 7-17 to come and learn the fundamentals of basketball from the new Wildcat mentor and his assistants.

"We're real pleased," Kruger

'I don't call anything I do work — coaching basketball and being with young people isn't work.'

Coach Lon Kruger

said. "I'm kind of surprised with the response after coming in so late and without much advance work. We relied totally on word of mouth and returning campers (from previous Jack Hartman camps).'

Kruger realizes basketball camps can't make a young player great, but it can provide him with a chance to improve.

"A lot of it depends on the attitude of the young person - a lot (of players) go to camp to become a better basketball player in a week," Kruger said. "You should go to camp to pick up a tip here and there and learn the things you need to work on.

"The kids can't expect to become great basketball players in one week. They have to apply what they learn in camp to their overall game."

But it is more than just learning basketball drills. After spending six hours a day on the basketball floor listening to lectures, working on fundamentals and playing games, Kruger hopes the campers leave the week with dreams of coming to

"It gives them a chance to get to know the coaching staff...and assuming we do a good job providing a good camp atmosphere with personal attention and which teaches the fundamentals (of basketball), they'll leave here with a good feeling about K-State," Kruger said.

"It's a matter of observing the kids while they are here. It is not a recruiting tool as much as a public relations move, but there is some recruiting involved."

The campers also received a special guest on Tuesday when Norris Coleman, who announced earlier that he would stay at K-State next season instead of transfer, told the young players to "keep hustling and work hard. I was not a great player when I was young - I was a late bloomer.'

Union

level don't see anything but texts," Smith said. The change was recommended by a bookstore consultant last year, who was hired after a student on the Union Governing Board suggested the change.

The cost of the Union Bookstore project is estimated at $25,000.

The Union Bookstore has also received new equipment, including a new cash register system and National Cash Register pricing machine, which prints the price tags registers scan. The new equipment cost about $180,000, Smith said. Smith said the current NCR machine was so outdated replacement parts were no longer available.

"We've limped along for the past two years," he said.

An elevator to make the Union more accessible to handicapped individuals was completed near the south entrance in late 1985, Smith said. That project cost $85,000, he said.

The Union has considered several cost-cutting moves, but has taken no action to change currently provided services. Smith said two policies were each costing the Union $50,000 every year: free check cashing and a 60 percent return on used books. However, he said, he felt the services were part of what the students paid for in their operations line item, and did not plan to add a check-cashing fee or reduce the return level.

To save money, the Union is cutting down on staff, but, Smith said, "We haven't hit the panic button

Smith said the Union had suffered some from the new movie theaters that have appeared in Manhattan. The wide variety of films now available has undermined support for the Union's two film series, UPC Feature Films and Kaleidoscope Films, Smith said.

The construction of the downtown mall does not pose any threat to the Union, Smith said. He said the Union has always "stayed within the University family," and he did not feel the Union was competing with downtown merchants.

The Union was completed in 1956 at cost of $1,650,000. An addition, costing an additional $1 million, was completed in 1963. A second addition was completed in 1972.

Board reviews teacher study

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Kansas Board of Education launched a review Wednesday of recommendations by a national panel designed to improve teacher quality.

The suggestions are contained in the Carnegie Forum Report "A Nation Prepared: Teachers for the 21st Century," developed a group made up of business, government and education representatives.

"Of primary concern to this group is how can education be structured to strengthen our economic system," said a description of the report given to state board members as they concluded their monthly two-day meeting here.

Board Chairman Robert Clemons of Independence said the board is interested in the proposals, but said they seem to be oriented more toward secondary teachers and the state board wants them also related to elementary teachers. "We'll be studying them to see what is applicable in Kansas," said Clemens. The Carnegie Forum recommendations include:

— Creating a national board for professional teaching standards to set standards and certify teachers who meet them.

Restructuring schools and the teacher force to give teachers more freedom in meeting state and local educational goals, but holding them accountable for student progress.

— Requiring a bachelor's degree in

The state board also approved Wednesday a working agreement with the Kansas Foundation for Partnerships in Education, a voluntary nonprofit organization whose goal is to promote ties between business and public education. Former Board of Education member Ann Keener is chairman of the foundation.

Companies, agencies, institutions and individuals are contributing personnel, printed materials and meeting rooms in various cities including Wichita, Topeka and Manhattan to strengthen partnerships in education in state schools, the board was told.

The board also received its Fiscal Year 1988 budget allocation from Gov. John Carlin Wednesday, but took no action on it. Appraisers disagree

Owners, city contest awards

By SHELLY WAKEMAN Staff Writer-

Thirteen condemnation awards paid to property owners for acquisition of land for the Town Center mall are currently on appeal in Riley County District Court, said Gary Stith, community development coordinates

Twelve of the 13 are being appealed by the property owners. The city is appealing the other award. Appeals for six of the properties have been filed by both the owner and city.

"I can't think of a more fair way the city could have handled it," said Fletcher Simmons, appraiser for David Craig and Associates of Manhattan. "We were hired to complete appraisals before anyone went to court. That was first before anything else."

Simmons was one of three appraisers hired by the city to complete appraisals of properties to be purchased for the project. The second appraiser, a representative of Kevin Nunnink and Associates of Olathe, refused comment.

The third, Gilbert Wenger, a review appraiser from Salina, received appraisals done by the other city-employed appraisers. He subsequently supplied the city with one figure based on both appraisals. "He usually went with the highest number," Simmons said of Wenger's recommendations.

After reviewing the appraisals, the city then presented offers to the property owners, who had the option of either accepting or refusing the offer. An appraiser could then be retained by the owner and a separate offered submitted.

If no agreement was reached, both parties could file suit in district court for the determination of awards. In public hearings, both parties also have the right to make a presentation to substantiate their offers.

After the hearings and appraisals, a figure is given to the court on the findings of the court-appointed appraisers. The judge then sets the condemnation award. If either party is unsatisfied, an appeal may be filed.

Jim Morris, 2827 Illinois Lane, and

Arlo Biere, 1617 Virginia Drive, coowners of Humboldt Square Shopping Center, are appealing for a difference of approximately $167,000.

In 1977, Morris and Biere paid $340,000 for the property including extensive remodeling. The city made an original offer of $390,000. Charles Hedges, an appraiser in Lawrence, conducted a separate appraisal and set the property value at just over $600,000, Morris said.

"There was never any negotiation," Morris said. "The court award was not much more than we paid for it."

The court condemnation award paid to the partners by the city was $433,000, Morris said.

"I think the appraisers that the city appointed were under a lot of pressure to make things fit. A lot of politics were involved," he said.

Although no court dates have been set for the 13 appeals, Stith anticipates all the appeals will be settled near the expected August 1987 completion date for the mall.

Of the properties currently on appeal, six are owned by Paul Bosch, Route 2, and Robert Sager, 204 Delaware Ave. Both the city and the two men are appealing all six condemnation awards.

In addition, the city is appealing the award of Bailey's Moving and Storage Co. Inc., owned by Warren Bailey, Topeka.

Other owners involved in current appeals include Ruth Schrum, 720 Midland Ave., who was the owner of the structure housing Lady Foot Shoes, and Dick Edwards, Route 1, of Dick Edwards Ford.

Also appealing are John and Jerene Farrell, who owned two properties — Farrell Electronics, 215 Poyntz Ave., and the structure which housed the Regulator Time Co., Ole Mike's Shooters, and Steve's Custom Auto Trim at Third and Houston streets

Contra aid profiting banks, industries, investigators say

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — Millions of dollars in U.S. non-lethal aid to Nicaraguan rebels have been funneled into offshore banks, paid to the military of a Central American nation or kept in the United States, congressional investigators said Wednesday.

The General Accounting Office, Congress' investigative arm, found that one broker for the rebels, known as Contras, received $3.3 million from the U.S. government but only sent $150,000 to Central America.

Most of that $3.3 million went instead to American companies and individuals, and $380,000 flowed into offshore accounts in Grand Cayman Island or the Bahamas, which have protective banking laws that offer tight secrecy, said Frank C. Conahan, GAO's director for international affairs.

"There is enough evidence to be concerned that humanitarian assistance may not be reaching the intended beneficiaries," Conahan said in testimony before the House Foreign Affairs subcommittee on Latin America.

Conahan said two accounts handling non-lethal aid to the rebels paid $986,689 to the "armed forces of a country in the region" with another $450,000 payment on Jan. 10, 1986 "to the commander-in-chief of that country's armed forces."

Although the GAO did not disclose the identity of the country, Rep. Michael Barnes, D-Md., subcommittee chairman, said the nation was Honduras. Congressional sources, who insisted on anonymity, said the check to the commander-in-chief, who was then-Gen. Walter Lopez Reyes, was endorsed by another military official.

Sources also identified one of the Cayman Island banks involved as BAC International, which is owned by Nicaraguan nationals. The Associated Press reported earlier this year that BAC International was used previously to launder CIA funds for the rebels.

Bosco Matamoros, spokesman for the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, FDN, the largest rebel army, criticized the GAO's findings as "a political effort to paralyze the American support" for the Contras.

The GAO assessment was based on its analysis of subpoenaed bank records of 14 accounts, mostly in Miami. The subcommittee issued the subpoenas on May 8 as part of its investigation into how $27 million in U.S. non-lethal aid to the rebels was "The information that the subcommittee has received in response to these subpoenas surpassed my worst fears," Barnes said. "It can only be described as shocking. Equally shocking is the fact that the State Department has declined an invitation to appear...to respond to today's testimony."

Barnes said the panel would try to subpoena records of the Cayman Island bank and would turn over its information to the Justice Department for possible criminal investigation.

The State Department's

The State Department's Nicaraguan Humanitarian Assistance Office has acknowledged trouble in fully accounting for the aid, but has insisted that the food, clothing and medicines are arriving at rebel camps. The State Department had no immediate comment on the new GAO testimony.

House Republicans criticized the Democrats for publicizing the problems of the Contra aid and drawing attention to the countries and individuals aiding the rebels.

"I don't think we should tolerate the misuse of funds, (but) some of this information being made public should not be made public," said Rep. Dan Burton, R-Ind. "Sabotage is not unknown in these kind of circumstances."

Rep. Michael DeWine, R-Ohio, said the money paid to the one country's armed forces could have been for boots and uniforms, and thus proper under rules for non-lethal aid.

But Democrats charged that the diversion of the funds demonstrated apparent corruption inside the Contra movement.

Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Topeka, has said all reports should be thoroughly investigated before basing legislation on alleged corruption.

Gas rate increase shifts burden to consumer

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — The Kansas Corporation Commission Wednesday gave KPL-Gas Service Co. tentative approval to increase its natural gas rates $15.4 million, including shifting some rate burden off large industrial users and onto the backs of residential and small commercial customers.

The commission, which regulates utilities in Kansas, made the preliminary decision at an administrative meeting today, about a month after the board sat through a week of hearings on KPL's request for $21.2 million in higher rates for its 550,000 natural gas customers in the state.

The commission opted for a proposal drafted by the KCC staff to cut the utility's plan to about $15.4 million, which would give KPL a 3.8 percent jump in revenue rather than the 5.2 percent revenue boost it would receive with a $21.2 million rate hike.

A final order is expected by Friday. The commission has until June 15 to issue a decision or the rates requested by KPL take effect automatically.

KPL, which is the state's largest natural gas utility, said it needed to recover higher operating expenses. The $21.2 million rate request included a 10.18 percent rate of return on the utility's investment in Kansas.

the utility's investment in Kansas. For an average residential customer using 10,000 cubic feet of gas per month, the rate increase would represent an additional $3.10 to $4.50 on the monthly bill, depending on the where the customer lives.

However, the staff said a 9.49 percent rate of return was more in line with the utility's needs. Under the staff proposal, an average residential bill would climb anywhere from $1.68 to $2.59 per month. The utility also will be permitted to raise its monthly service charge from $4.10 to $5

The rate request was filed Oct. 18, 1985, and KPL officials say it is designed to reduce the difference in gas prices charged prior to the merger of KPL with the Gas Service Co. in 1983.

"There was a significant difference between Gas Service and KPL rates and the company is going in the right direction in trying to narrow those differences," said Michael Lennen, chairman of the threemember commission.

The company also is trying to shift some of the rate burden from large commercial and industrial customers onto residential gas users and small commercial customers.

Those larger customers likely would see their utility bills drop 1.5 percent under the decision while some residential and small commercial customers would experience 7 percent increases in their bills.

The 25,000 customers on KPL's "C" system in Atchison, Leavenworth, Lansing, Effingham and Emporia would experience the largest increases in the proposal to consolidate rates. Those customers historically have paid lower rates because cheaper gas was available for those areas.

The increases would not be as dramatic for the 231 communities in the eastern two-thirds of the state and 420,000 customers in Gas Service's former territory and on KPL's "B" system. Those towns in this category include Kansas City, Kan., Wichita, Topeka and Overland Park.

The increases would be about the same for the KPL main line system, which serves 110,000 customers in 106 cities including Manhattan, Abilene, Salina and Great Bend.

An issue which developed during the hearing over KPL's policy of transporting natural gas for other pipeline companies has been diffused.

The commission ordered KPL to develop rates it will charge other pipelines for transporting gas and those rates will include sufficient markup so that KPL doesn't lose any money in the deal.

Large industrial customers are trying to force KPL to pipe in gas bought from independent producers which is cheaper than KPL's source of gas. The utility has refused, saying it would jeopardize its contract which guarantees a long-term supply of cheap gas.

FBI to investigate violence, shootings

By The Associated Press

CLEVELAND - Months of racial tension in a overwhelmingly white neighborhood erupted with the shootings of eight whites by a black man, and the FBI said Wednesday it has begun a civil rights investigation into whether the area's only black family was harassed.

A 24-year-old black man opened fire with a shotgun late Tuesday night, aiming at a group of people who had earlier set fireworks outside the black family's house in the working-class neighborhood on the city's West Side, police said.

The man, a resident of suburban Parma who had been visiting the family, was arrested but not charged. None of the eight people shot was seriously injured.

The black family, which moved into a county-owned house in February, had been subjected to taunts by some neighborhood whites for weeks, said city Councilman Jay Westbrook. In April, the letters "KKK" were spray-painted on their

Some whites said Wednesday the shootings showed blacks should not move into the area.

But Larry Maynard, father of 20-year-old Larry Ray Maynard, who was wounded by 21 shotgun pellets, said the Armstrongs had to leave.

"They've got to go now. There isn't any two ways about it," Maynard said. "If any more (blacks) move in, that's it. The people here won't put up with it. I won't say anything, but the other people would. ... I bet you if you go through here tonight, everybody will have a gun."

Regents study six University programs

By JILL HUMMELS Campus Editor and DARRIN RUDD Collegian Reporter

Two members of the Kansas Board of Regents are on campus today to review several University programs. Sandra McMullen, Regent chairwoman, and Frank Becker will be looking at several aspects of the programs, including cost-effectiveness, unneccessary duplication of courses, and quality of the program - what it actually does for students. Six programs - the interdisciplinary genetics program; the dance program within the Department of Physical Education, Dance and Leisure Studies; the theater program in the Department of Speech; and the departments of Journalism and Mass Communications, Art, and Music - will be reviewed today, said has been progressing for some time. Each program to be reviewed was given a guideline for self-assessment set forth by the Regents. The selfstudy includes how well the programs are faring and where the programs could be improving the instructional level, Stamey said.

In Arts and Sciences, following completion of the program assessments by the faculty members, the self-studies were forwarded to Stamey. Within the selfstudy report, the faculty could cite what it believed should be the No. 1 priority, he said. Stamey had to place those priority requests within the perspective of the entire college.

Stamey then met with Provost Owen Koeppe to make reccommendations for the preparation of an administrative summary. The summary placed the college's top needs within the perspective of the University and was then sent to the Regents. Both the administrative summary and the self-studies will be available to the Regents.

The administrative summary is a time saving measure for the Regents. The summary of the selfstudies is much shorter than the assessments themselves.

During the visit, the Regents will have a chance to talk to faculty, the department head and two students within each program. The two Regents will make a report to the rest of the board. The Regents will use the reports to assess the future direction of the programs, he said.

The facilities and equipment for the programs such as music or radio and TV are at times as important as the programs themselves, which is why the Regents are making the trip to K-State instead of relying solely on the summary, Stamey said.

Programs are reviewed every five years. This is the fourth year of the first five-year cycle. After next year, the Regents will have completed a review of every program at K-State. Other schools within the Regents system are undergoing similar reviews, Stamey said.

The Regents will spend the next week traveling among the various institutions. Other Regents will be on campus June 19 to review additional programs at the University. On June 24 and 25, Stamey will travel to Topeka to present an assessment of additional Arts and Sciences programs, he said.

"Because of the wide variety of programs within the college of Arts and Sciences, we are involved (in the year review) every year," Stamey said. Because other colleges in the University contain more uniform programs, they come up for review only once every five years, he said.

Lafene fee increase needs support

Lafene Student Health Center is fighting an uphill battle. It is supported entirely by students. No state or federal funds are used to operate Lafene; only student dollars make medical care a reality at K-State.

A decline in enrollment would obviously indicate a decline in money going into Lafene. Even though almost 63,000 people used the services at Lafene last year, the program was in the red by more than $19,000.

In 1983, Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene Student Health Center requested a $30 increase in health fees over a three-year period. Three years later he is getting what he calls a "token increase" of only $5.

It is unrealistic to believe a $5 increase in student health fees can allow Lafene to compete with the rising costs of adequate health

Students who do not use Lafene may not be receptive to an increase in health fees, but by paying the fees, the services at Lafene are available for any student who needs help, regardless of how often each student uses the facilities.

Like many small hospitals throughout the state, Lafene has tried to combat the rising cost of health care by increasing the costs to students. As of June 10, all charges at Lafene have increased 20 percent because of a lack of a sufficient student health fee increase.

If more students would take advantage of the services Lafene has to offer and support a worthy health fee increase, the center would remain intact. If student support declines much more, Lafene Student Health Center will be only a historical footnote at K-State.

Park program offers fun for all

There's something for everyone this summer with Arts in the Park.

Program director Don Cukjati has packed a program bursting with cultural entertainment. The schedule includes bluegrass, and country bands, in addition to artists of national and international acclaim. Children can enjoy puppet shows and movies every Wednesday night, while Tuesday nights feature the Manhattan Municipal Band.

The best news is most of this stuff is free.

Saturday, the Trinidad Tripoli Steel Band promises to have the crowd "swinging all night." The band has won a Grammy Award and toured with Liberace.

Award-winning country songwriter Helen Cornelius is scheduled to perform in July, along with jazz soloist Rich Matteson and the Manhattan (Kansas) Jazz Orchestra.

Children and adults alike shouldn't miss the Children's Theatre production of Kansas' classic "Wizard of Oz." (The Wednesday night children's puppet shows and movies have already drawn a not-just-for-kids crowd.)

The summer will end with a "back by popular demand" rock 'n' roll performance by Flash Cadillac in late July.

Many local organizations should be thanked for the financial support they have graciously extended so the Manhattan Arts in the Park program can reach regional excellence in programming.

U.S. misperceives nature of Islam

The office of non-Christian affairs at the Vatican has produced a document resulting from the Second Vatican Council (1965) which pointed at a new trend toward Islam and Muslims.

The document has invited the reader to: clear away the out-dated image inherited from the past or distorted prejudice and slander that Christians have of Islam; recognize the past injustice towards the Muslims for which the West, with its Christian education, is to blame; and criticize the misconception Christians have of Islam.

And since the Americans have the "responsibility to be informed" according to Professor Pervez Ali (speaker at Union Catskeller, April 28, 1986) I have started my column by referring to the Vatican document as an introduction to my humble attempt to inform the reader of the "real face" of Islam which many, Ali included, are trying to veil with an ugly mask.

Among the numerous misconceptions people may have of Islam, those concerning the "Quran," "Prophet Muhammad," "Jihad" and "human rights," particularly women's rights, are worthy of pointing out. However, I shall deal in what follows with the concept of

"Jihad."
The Arabic word "Jihad" is derived from the Arabic word "Juhd" which means "an effort." "Jihad," therefore, is a struggle, an exertion of effort in the "path of God." This includes striving against evil inclinations within one's self to become a better human being, striving against evil in, and for the good of the society and the world at large.

SAMY ALY Guest Columnist

This could be done most effectively by studying the reasons of social and international problems and offering the proper solutions. Muslims are willing to join all the peace and justice-loving people in a collective effort to achieve such noble goals. The "Jihad" may take the form of a military encounter to defend Islam and Muslim countries (Afghanistan is a bright example). This particular aspect of Jihad is conditional as documented in these Quranic passages:

"God forbids you, not those who fought against you on account of religion and drove you not out from your homes, that you should show them kindness and deal justly with them. Lo! God loves the just dealer,"(60:8) and "...and fight in the path of God those who fight against you and do not transgress."(2:190).

In such a legal war, Muslim fighters are instructed to spare those who don't fight them. In particular, women, children and people who are devoted to worship (e.g. monks), not to destroy crops, animals, hospitals, etc. if they have to retaliate against transgressors who initiated a war and are not inclined to establish a peace based on justice.

Muslims also are instructed not to finish an injured enemy and certainly not to mutilate the dead. Let the American people know that any act of violence against innocent people is not a feature of the "real face" of Islam. Let them know that any injustice against non-Muslims living in the Islamic State is considered, in the words of Prophet Muhammad, as injustice against the Prophet himself

The unfortunate stereotypes like "militant Islam," "Holy War" and "Islamic terrorism" and the frequent portrayal of Muslims and Arabs in the movies, even cartoon movies and TV ads as foolish, lustful and savage people are both unfair and biased.

The reader may or may not know that Muslims revere prophets Moses and Jesus and their teachings, however, we Muslims should point out that acts of brutal violence against innocent Muslims in many places of the world are done by people who confess to be Christians or Jews.

However, the media never used "Christian terrorism" or "Judaic terrorism" to refer to such unjustified acts. Examples of these are: The Israelis use of terror weapons in residential areas in west Beirut during the barbaric invasion of Lebanon (1982).

Such weapons as the cluster and phosphorus bombs were extensively used despite the fact that they are restricted by protocols of the 1980 United Nations convention and by the Israel-U.S. agreement in 1978.

The Israeli obstruction of the United Nations' relief work and other humanitarian international help for those needing it during the Lebanon invasion is another example of terrorism.

A third example is the Sabra and Chatilla 40-hours massacre in which at least 2,000 Lebanese and Palestinian have perished; bodies were mutilated, and some of the dead had crosses carved on their chests, a Phalangist trademark.

The most recent example is the United States' attack on Libyan civilians followed by lipservice statements of sorrow.

Does the media then have enough integrity and unbias to tell the world that the unjustified acts of violence against innocent people regardless of their faith, color or race are equally condemned? Does it have the integrity to tell the world that, like the teachings of prophets Moses and Jesus, the teachings of Quran and Prophet Muhammad do not promote hatred, violence and fanaticism? Do the American people know that several Islamic centers here in the United States have been subject to vandalism in the past seven months?

Samy H. Aly is a research associate for department of physics.

Distorted views

Editor,

I think Tim Fitzgerald, Collegian columnist, is entitled to his opinion about the personal integrity of Pat Robertson and Jesse Jackson ("they do not seek the White House for the good of the United States, but for the good of themselves"), but it appears that Tim's perspective is somewhat distorted.

Would he perhaps prefer a used-car salesman in the White House? Ministers, doctors, and other people who have given their life to serving others are generally looked up to and are perceived to have greater personal integrity than lawyers, actors and

Obviously, people on the boundary (TV ministers for example) may fall in the middle somewhere, but to assume that religious professionals are inherently less trustworthy than other professionals is religious bigotry of the worst kind.

I personally would rather trust the White House to someone whose personal integrity is founded on deep-seated religious values (like Carter or maybe Robertson) than someone whose values come from the dog-eat-dog political system of this country, and in the absence of positive evidence of incompetence, I suspect that many of the citizens of this country would agree.

More than 30 injured in hydrofoil accident

MESSINA, Sicily — Fire broke out Wednesday on a hydrofoil traveling between Sicily and the Lipari Islands, killing at least four people, officials said. Eleven people were reported missing in rough waters.

Some passengers jumped overboard to escape the flames, the Italian news agency ANSA reported. At least 31 people were injured, said an official who spoke on condition of anonymity. News reports said two of the injured were in serious condition. The Messina fire department reported three women and one man were confirmed dead.

The Freccia di Messina carried a total of 62 passengers and crew on its run between the islands and the port city of Milazzo, the official said.

ANSA said the fire broke out in the engine room in mid-afternoon. At the time, the hydrofoil was about three miles off the Sicilian coast. The cause of the blaze was not immediately known.

ANSA said a tugboat was towing the hydrofoil toward the port of Milazzo, about 15 miles west of Messina.

The Lipari Islands are a chain of tiny islands that are popular with campers and

U.S. foreign trade deficit improves slightly

WASHINGTON — The U.S. foreign trade deficit totaled $36.59 billion in the first three months of the year, a slight improvement from the record deficit posted in the fourth quarter of 1985, the government reported today.

The Commerce Department said the deficit from January through March compared with a record $37.35 billion deficit suffered from October through December.

The improvement came as the surge in imports slowed while growth of U.S. exports picked up, reflecting the weaker value of the dollar, which is helping domestic manufacturers with their overseas sales.

Exports totaled $53.55 billion in the first three months of the year, a 1.6 percent gain from the fourth quarter. Imports rose, but by a much smaller 0.1 percent, to total $90.13 billion. Imports had jumped a sharp 7 percent in the fourth quarter.

The new report confirmed parallel figures released earlier that showed a higher deficit for the first three months of the year of $43.5 billion. The discrepancy exists because today's report on trade, on a balance-of-payments basis, omits such factors as military sales and the cost of shipping and insurance.

But, he said, "Yes, I think we should go forward with another shuttle."

Reagan also defended his decision that the United States should not longer feel constrained to abide by the limits of the unratified SALT II arms control treaty with

Former singer enters 'no contest' to charge

LOS ANGELES — Cathy Evelyn Smith, a former rock backup singer, pleaded no contest Wednesday to charges of involuntary manslaughter in the death of John Belushi and three charges of administering the heroin and cocaine that killed the comedian.

Defense attorney Howard Weitzman, who had described Belushi as a victim of his own excesses, told Superior Court Judge David A. Horowitz the plea was entered only because Smith believed it to be in her best interest.

ly because Smith believed it to be in her best interest.

"Miss Smith in no way concedes she is responsible for Mr. Belushi's death," Weitzman said.

Her no contest plea is the criminal equivalent of a guilty plea, but cannot be used against her in civil suits.

The maximum sentence possible under the terms of her plea agreement would be eight years and eight months in prison.

Smith had been charged with one count of second-degree murder and 13 of furnishing and injecting Belushi with drugs including the cocaine-heroin "speedball" which killed him. The original charges carried a maximum term of 25 years to life.

The comedian was found dead March 5, 1982, in a bungalow of the Chateau Marmont Hotel on the Sunset Strip. The coroner listed acute heroin and cocaine poisoning as the cause of death.

Man slaughters pig in park, charges filed

JUPITER BEACH, Fla. — A man who slaughtered and skinned a pig in a park for a barbecue on Memorial Day faces up to 16 months in jail and fines of $2,000 if convicted of three misdemeanors brought against him in the case.

Charles Shearin was charged Tuesday with disorderly conduct, cruelty to animals and bringing a domesticated animal to a county park in the May 27 incident that some bystanders said sickened them and frightened children.

"I hope it (the charges) will say to people that we don't tolerate this," said Kay-

Lynette Starling-Roca, director of Palm Beach County's Humane Society.
Witnesses told police that Shearin, 32, took the black pig from his truck, stuck it with a knife and hung it from a tree by its hind legs and skinned it.

Farmland Industries eliminates trade show

KANSAS CITY, Mo. — Citing the declining farm economy, Farmland Industries Inc., has announced that its annual meeting will become a one-day affair beginning with its 1986 meeting in December.

The nation's largest farm supply cooperative announced Tuesday that it will eliminate a two-day trade show at Bartle Hall.

The new format will tend strictly to the business of the cooperative, said Farmland spokesman Bill Matteson. He said the change "is one of a number that we've recognized in light of the farm economy."

In the past about 10,000 visitors attended the meeting. It is expected about 1,000 will attend this year's 24-hour meeting, scheduled to run from noon Dec. 4 to noon Dec. 5.

Smallest election records greatest turnout

TOPEKA — The smallest vote ever taken in Kansas also had the highest percentage of turnout ever recorded as the South Brown Township in Edwards County voted 35-16 to approve a 2.5 mill increase for road improvements.

Secretary of State Jack Brier reported the results of the mail ballot election

Secretary of State Jack Brier reported the results of the mail ballot election Wednesday, noting the election had a 100 percent participation.

"This is democracy at its finest," Brier said. "Every registered voter took the opportunity to tell their elected officials how their tax money should be spent."

Kansans have been voting by mail in selected elections since 1983 and the average participation has been 77 percent. The previous record was 90.5 percent in an Iola school board election. The smallest election prior to the South Brown Township vote occurred in Protection in 1983 when 394 votes were cast.

During the 1985-86 school year, $1,665,310 in scholarships have been awarded to K-State students. This figure includes both scholarships granted by University and non-University organizations.

All scholarships offered by K-State are based on academic achievement to some extent because a 2.5 cumulative grade point average is required to qualify, said James Upham, acting director of Student Financial Aid.

"Ninety percent (of scholarships) are based on merit; 10 percent require need," he said. Previously, the scholarship program was based more on need, but programs such as the Pell Grant provided help for those students who had financial need. The creation of the Pell Grant caused some aggravation among those who saw a need to recognize students on the basis of merit, he said.

The average University funded scholarship is $592. For non-University scholarships the average is $715. Upham said that this year an arbitrary figure of $600 for a general University scholarship was set by Financial Aid and this amount was given to qualifying applicants starting with a 4.0 GPA and working down until the funds ran out. This year, the cut off GPA for the general scholarships was 3.936.

Money for these awards is given to the KSU Foundation. These endowments come from various sources such as alumni, service clubs, churches and businesses and telefunds sponsored by the individual colleges, he said.

A University financial aid committee makes policy concerning where general unrestricted funds are distributed. Each individual college has its own scholarship committee with its own standards for determining who will be awarded scholarships, he said.

The most prestigious scholarship offered at K-State is the Henry J. Putnam Memorial Scholarship, established by L. Irene Putnam.

The establishment of this scholarship fund in 1956 made it the largest in the history of the University, he said. It includes $100,000 in cash and close to 30 farms. This scholarship is awarded to incoming freshmen on the basis of merit and is renewable for four years as long as the student maintains a "B" average and remains unmarried.

The priority date for turning in applications for scholarships of merit is Jan. 15. For turning in applications for scholarships of need the priority date is March 15. Applications for scholarships may be picked up in the Financial Aid Office in Fairchild 104.

Engineering gains equipment

By The Collegian Staff

The College of Engineering has kept up its success in obtaining outside support by receiving $150,000 in new equipment from the Hewlett-Packard Co. of Palo Alto, Calif.

The gift was given to K-State and a select number of other universities. This is the second gift K-State has received from Hewlett-Packard, with the first received in the fall of

To apply for the equipment, the college had to submit a formal request. The college usually applies for support every other year.

Donald Rathbone, dean of engineering, said the process is 'very competitive (and) formalized. Along with other companies, Hewlett-Packard recruits a large number of K-State engineering graduates. Rathbone said he believes this factor contributes to K-State's success in receiving the gift the past few years. The equipment was given to the departments of mechanical engineering, and electrical and computer engineering.

Nine personal computercompatible Vectra microcomputers have been designated for use by the mechanical engineering department. The equipment will be available to both students and facul-

Other equipment received includes two color-graphic computers with network capabilities, plotter, graphics for entering data on the screen and a printer. The equipment is designed toward applications in integrated circuit design and printed circuit layout.

"This new equipment will bring many benefits," Rathbone said. "It will certainly help recruiting, and it will enhance our computer list.

"We are greatly appreciative of this gift from Hewlett-Packard," he

By The Collegain Staff

Andy Nelson, junior in journalism and mass communications, placed third nationally in the William Randolph Hearst Foundation's photojournalism competition. Nelson also won first place for news college photography and best of show for a single picture in the Hearst cham-

Because he woriginally placed among the three best conege photographers competing, Nelson was flown to San Francisco in May for an on-the-spot photo competition. The three photographers were then awarded first, second or third place, Nelson said.

In April, Nelson was named runner-up in the University of Missouri's College Photographer Of the Year.

The Hearst competition is one of many contests Nelson has placed in. Nelson won first place for spot news in the 1984 Atlanta Press Photographer's Association Seminar

Photo Competition and second place in the news catagory in the National Press Photographer's Association monthly photo contest in June of 1984, he said. Nelson was awarded third place as College Photographer of the Year for 1984-85 in the Society of Professional Journalists' region seven. Region seven is a four-state area consisting of Kansas, Arkansas,

Missouri and Oklahoma. Nelson is currently working as a Ric's Cafe photography intern for The Seattle Times. Nelson in the past has interned for The Denver Post, The Topeka Capital-Journal, The Hutchinson News, The Manhattan Mercury, and the Associated Press as a Manhattan area stringer. As an intern for The Kansas City Star, Nelson took a photo of the Johnson County floodwaters which was awarded the National Press Photographer's Association Collegiate Picture of the Year

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - John Moses had three hits and drove in three runs as the Seattle Mariners collected a season-high 18 hits in a 12-2 rout of the mistake-plagued Kansas City Royals Wednesday night.

The Mariners, beating the Royals for the eighth time in nine games in Kansas City, chased starter Charlie Leibrandt with seven runs in the second inning and added five in the

Along with Moses, Harold Reynolds had three hits for the Mariners while Jim Presley, Dave Henderson, Spike Owen and Steve Yeager all had two in support of Mike Morgan, 4-6, who pitched a complete game with an eight-hitter. Leibrandt, 6-4, was hurt by four Royals errors.

Yeager singled Owen home with the fourth run, then Reynolds was safe on third baseman George Brett's fielding error. Moses follow-ed with a double scoring Yeager and putting Reynolds at third, then both scored on Davis' single.

Henderson singled leading off the third and took second on Owen's single. Reliever David Cone then walked Yeager to load the bases and Reynolds hit a two-run single.

Yeager went to third and Reynolds took second on left fielder Lonnie Smith's fielding error and both scored on Moses' double. With two out, Presley doubled to score Moses with the 12th run.

Jorge Orta singled in the Kansas City second and scored ahead of Frank White's seventh home run.

Ironically for the Mariners, their 18 hits did not include a home run for the first time in 11 games.

Coleman content with choice

By TONY CARBAJO City/Recreation Editor

After shunning five of the nation's top collegiate basketball programs to remain at K-State where he may not be able to play for nearly an entire season, Norris Coleman said he is content with his decision.

Coleman, last season's highest national scoring freshman with a 21.8 points per game average, was freed by the National Collegiate Athletic Association to transfer to another school and be immediately eligible. He was also granted three full years of eligibility, should he leave K-State.

But Coleman elected to remain at the University where he quickly thrust himself into the national limelight. And, barring any legal action taken by Coleman and his Topeka lawyer, Jeff Schemmel, he may not be able to display the skills that earned him first team All-Big Eight and the league's Newcomer of the Year honors for one season.

"A year ago no one wanted me, or should I say no one knew of me," Coleman said. "K-State gave me the opportunity to play college basketball and I took all that into consideration. "When I decided to stay at K-State

- it is not just the basketball - it is the people and the support I have received."

"Sarge," 24, spent nearly six years in the Army before coming to K-State and he said he has grown tired of relocating all across the country, and the world for that matter. "I have been in the Army six years and have moved all around," Coleman said of his service stint which included a stop in West Germany. "I am finally settled here and I am happy to live with that. I am happy here. There (another school), I don't know. I know here because I like the school and because of the fans.'

Coleman visited five schools Kentucky, Maryland, Virginia, Jacksonville and Louisiana State all of which made the prestigious NCAA Tournament last season. Louisiana State advanced as far as the Final Four before bowing out.

Renowned coaches at these institutions, such as Eddie Sutton, Charles "Lefty" Driesell, Terry Holland and even Dale Brown, could not lure Coleman to play for their respective pro-

They all gave me the means to go to their school and made me feel accepted in their programs," Coleman said. "They all made the NCAA Tournament and had great coaches. All of them had nice facilities - that might amuse a high school kid but not me. I didn't want to make another adjustment."

By staying at K-State and possibly sitting out one year, basketball experts say Coleman is jeopardizing substantial income potential in the National Basketball Association later on down the line. Coleman said earlier he would like to play two more years and then turn professional.

"You have a lot of critics who say you will be too old to play in the NBA.' So what? Some say 'you can only play six years now instead of 10," Coleman said. "I would rather play six years than none at all. Most people don't even get to play (in the NBA) at all. My goal was just to play college basketball, so that doesn't bother me.'

No arrangements have yet been made regarding a lawsuit, Coleman said. "Even if that fails I am still willing to sit out a year," he said.

High school students earn credits during University science program

By ELIZABETH EDWARDS Collegian Reporter

Fifteen high school students from across the state are on campus this summer gaining new experiences in physics and mathematics, as well as earning five college credit hours.

The students are enrolled in the Summer Science Institute, one of a variety of summer programs being offered through the Division of Continuing Education.

The program, which started June 1 and runs through July 4, is being taught in Cardwell Hall by Larry Weaver, professor of physics, and David Surowski, associate professor of mathematics. "This program is for outstanding high school students interested in math and science," Weaver said. Students must be nominated by a high school teacher and must write an essay before being admitted to the Students will gain several benefits, Weaver said.

"We hope they will have gained confidence in their ability to think about problems that are wildly beyond the scope of their normal experiences," he said. "They are able to do things (here) most school systems don't provide." Additionally, he said students will gain specific skills and have the opportunity to be with other people with interests and abilities similar to their own. The eight-week session, with lectures in the morning and activities in the afternoon, covers such topics as atomic physics, astronomy, quantum mechanics, probability, number theory, topology - the study of those properties of a surface that don't change - and symmetry.

The first Summer Science Institute was held at K-State in 1981 and covered the role of modeling in the physical sciences. Originally made possible through funding from the National Science Foundation, the program was discontinued in 1982 because "that particular division of the NSF folded," Weaver said.

In 1983, Professor James Legg of the physics department reorganized the Summer Science Institute with the support of the College of Arts and Sciences, Weaver said.

There are many diverse programs being offered on campus this summer by the Division of Continuing Education, according to Mark Jones, summer high school programs facilitator. Some of the programs currently in session are Design Discovery, an architecture group; Summer Honors; Science in Agriculture and Food Institute; Graphics Design, studying airbrush techniques; and a high school writers group studying poetry and

Students find leadership in ROTC

By GONZÁLO GALLEGOS Collegian Reporter

The opportunities to be found in Air Force ROTC may not be widely known. But for students currently enrolled at K-State, discovering the program could mean gaining training in leadership and management

The two-year program, also known as the Professional Officer Course, is open to students who did not sign up for Air Force ROTC as freshmen or sophomores.

'Anyone with two years in school regardless if they are undergraduates or graduates can feasibly get into the two-year program," said Maj. Michael Chrisman, admissions counselor for Air Force ROTC programs in Kansas and Missouri.

However, the Air Force ROTC does not want to exclude interested high school seniors, freshmen and sophomores. They may enroll in the general military course and then may become eligible for the two-year program. From this experience, students will be able decide if they want to make a commitment to the Air Force, Chrisman said.

"We encourage a student to enroll in the general course for at least a semester or a year or more," Chrisman said. "It isn't good to have Air Force officers who don't want to

Although many people may know there is an Air Force ROTC program, they do not look into the opportunities and benefits the programs offer, Chrisman said.

"People know Air Force ROTC is here but don't know how it works or what the objectives are," he said. 'We encourage people to stop by and

The mission of the Air Force ROTC is to recruit, educate and commission second lieutenants, he said. This is done at the college level by stressing leadership and management training. The training is reinforced by practical applications in weekly leadership labs.

Besides the leadership and management training, the program offers scholarships varying from $10,000 to $40,000. Credit courses for military science can also apply to most majors as electives. Chrisman said that in addition to this, all cadets in the two-year program receive $100 a month. There is also job security after a commission has been

"The cadets know that once they graduate they will have a commission and a job in the area they want. Last year, we only had one person who did not get a job in the area they wanted," Chrisman said. Chrisman believes the major objections students have to joining the Air Force are the four-year commitment to a life they know nothing about. Many people cannot envision themselves as Air Force officers because of their background, he said. Lori Ann Baier, senior in mathematics, finds military science to be a change in lifestyle.

"I came from a normal family background and I learned a lot about something that was new to me," said Baier, who will be fall Cadet Corps commander.

"It requires sacrifice just like anything else in the world, but the return in relation to the sacrifice is better than anything else I can think of," Chrisman said about the fouryear commitment to military service following commission.

Ultimately, students may find the chance to do new things with their lives and preparing themselves for future opportunities are the most advantageous benefits the Air Force ROTC offers, he said.

Smaller wheat harvest to lower market prices

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Farmers are harvesting the smallest winter wheat crop in eight years, but it's still big enough to weigh heavily on market

According to the Agriculture Department's latest forecast, winter wheat output this year will be about 1.58 billion bushels, down 14 percent from last year's harvest and 1 percent less than indicated a month ago. According to USDA records, that would be the smallest winter wheat harvest since 1.22 billion bushels were produced in 1978.

In a related supply-and-demand report issued Tuesday, department analysts projected total U.S. wheat output this year at about 2.15 billion bushels, including the winter and spring crops. That would be the smallest production since 1979, when 2.13 billion bushels were harvested.

Despite the prospective cutback in 1986 production, which has been warmly received by grower organizations and government policymakers, the U.S. wheat supply remains huge and a burden on market prices. The supply-and-demand projections showed wheat prices at the farm in 1986-87 may average $2.25 to $2.50 per bushel, down from $3.16 last season. One reason will be the lower government supports authorized by Congress in last year's farm law.

For example, price support loan rates for 1986-crop wheat were lowered to $2.40 per bushel from $3.30 for the 1985 harvest. The lower supports are intended to make U.S. crops more attractive to foreign buyers and thus boost exports, a prime source of income for American farmers.

The latest wheat figures were released as USDA prepared to hold a non-binding poll among wheat farmers next week on whether they would favor mandatory acreage controls to head off rising surpluses and help boost market prices.

Administration officials have opposed mandatory controls in favor of voluntary, market-oriented programs provided by the new law. However, the law also required USDA to conduct the poll, scheduled to begin June 18.

Agriculture Secretary Richard E. Lyng has urged wheat producers to reject the concept of mandatory controls. He said this would require idling at least half of the nation's wheat acreage to boost market prices to the level advocated by many supporters 25 percent above costs of production, or around $4.15 per bushel.

Lyng said such mandatory curbs would have "a chilling effect on wheat exports" and make U.S. grain uncompetitive in the world market.

But David L. Senter, national director of the American Agriculture Movement, advocated a strong "yes" vote in support of mandatory controls. He said farmers need supply management so they can "produce what's needed and stop this idiotic overproduction.'

The farm price of wheat has had little impact on food prices in recent years. Used primarily as a bread grain, there is less than a nickel's worth of wheat in a 1 pound loaf of

According to the latest production report, winter wheat output this year may yield an average of 36.8 bushels per acre, compared with last year's 38.1 bushels per harvested acre and 37.4 bushels forecast in May.

Farmers are expected to have about 42.8 million acres for harvest this year, down from almost 48 million in 1985.

Indicated production of winter wheat and average yields in 1986 by major producing states, based on June 1 prospects, included:

Arkansas, 21,600,000 bushels and an average yield of 36 bushels per acre; California, 56,440,000 and 83; Colorado, 95,700,000 and 33; Georgia, 14,300,000 and 26; Idaho, 53,600,000 and 67; Illinois, 35,200,000 and 44.

Indiana, 40,000,000 and 50; Kansas, 320,000,000 and 32; Kentucky, 10,880,000 and 34; Michigan, 42,000,000 and 60; Missouri, 19,240,000 and 37; Montana, 66,000,000 and 33; Nebraska, 82,000,000 and 41.

North Carolina, 14,580,000 and 27; Ohio, 51,000,000 and 50; Oklahoma, 145,600,000 and 28; Oregon, 53,940,000 and 58; South Dakota, 70,980,000 and 42; Tennessee, 9,300,000 and 31; Texas, 119,600,000 and 26; and Washington, 114,800,000 and 56.

Bands to perform at Arts in the Park

By JOLA MURPHY Staff Writer

Many area residents have found plenty of activities to help fill the leisure hours of summer through Arts in the Park.

Don Cukjati, coordinator of Arts in the Park, has been pleased and surprised with the response so far from Manhattan residents.

"It's going just super," Cukjati said. "We were very pleased with the response we got at the Danny and the Juniors concert (Friday) and especially at the youth dance with Steve, Bob & Rich (Saturday). It was more than I expected."

Arts in the Park concludes its first full week of entertainment with the Double "TT" Country Band and Gary Yoder tonight, followed by the Wheatland Express Bluegrass Band on Friday, and Trinidad Tripoli Steel Band on Saturday. All concerts begin at 8 p.m. on the stage in City Park.

A large crowd is expected by Cukjati when the Trinidad Tripoli Steel Band returns Saturday for its fifth annual appearance with its music from the islands performed on steel drums. The band toured with Liberace and won a Grammy

"The Trinidad Tripoli always ple here in Manhattan," Cukjati 12 Double "TT" Country Band said. "I'm sure it will be a great show."

And Arts in the Park has events especially for children. Many children in the Manhattan area can enjoy gathering near the stage 17 every Wednesday night to laugh along with Puppet Theater. The evening starts with a puppet show, followed by such movies as "Jungle Book" and "Pinocchio."

"Our puppet show is always a successful program and it gets kids out and gives them some good, clean entertainment," Cukjati said.

The fourth annual Local Talent 21 Variety Show is scheduled for July 5. The talent show is for amateur performers who just want to have a good time performing on stage, Cukjati said. Trophies will be awarded.

'Our talent show is always a lot 27 of fun," Cukjati said. "We're still looking for participants. Talent of any kind is welcome.'

Cukjati said people interested in performing can contact him at the Manhattan Parks and Recreation Department, 537-0056, extension 266. Cukjati will serve as the master of ceremonies.

"I enjoy myself so much up on that stage," he said.

Financial aid office gains new director

By PAT REDMAN Collegian Reporter

The University has named a new director for the Office of Student Financial Assistance.

Larry L. Viterna, assistant director of student affairs and financial aid at the University of Nebraska School of Technical Agriculture in Curtis, was selected Friday to succeed Robert Evans as director of the Office of Student Financial Assistance at K-State.

Viterna, 41, who has been with the University of Nebraska since 1975, will assume duties at K-State July 15. "I'm excited and delighted to be chosen," he said. "I'm looking forward to working at K-State.

Viterna and two other finalists were interviewed last month. The interviews were the culmination of a nationwide, three-month search which drew 25 applications, said Pat Bosco, assistant vice president for educational and student services.

As financial aid director, Viterna will be responsible for awarding $34 million in federal, state and private aid to University students. The forms of aid include scholarships, loans, student employment and work-study programs.

As chief administrator for financial aid. Viterna will report directly to vice president for institutional advancement, a new position that is expected to be filled in mid-August, said William W. Sutton, vice president for educational and student services, who selected Viterna. Previously, the director reported to

"Larry comes to KSU with excellent credentials," Sutton said. "We are impressed by his broad knowledge of the federal regulations governing student aid programs. His attitude is very enthusiastic toward Kansas State University."

Viterna said his overall objective will be, "to service a new stewardship of public funds and yet distribute those funds with equity."

"It is a very well-run operation. I'm just glad to be a part of it," he said. He added that the first few months will be a learning process and he doesn't anticipate any immediate changes.

Viterna's experience in student affairs will be an important asset to his position, he said.

'I'm confident in myself and I know how to work well with students. As assistant at the Curtis campus, I've worked with admissions, student housing and student activities," he said. Viterna - who has 10 years of financial aid, administrative and management experience - will be working with nearly 15,000 more students than he is accustomed to. Currently, there are 200 to 250 students receiving financial assistance at the Curtis campus, compared to 15,000 at K-State, he

"It's a big step, but I'm looking foward to the challenge," he said. Viterna's starting salary at K-State will be $38,500 per year. His salary at the Nebraska institution was $34,500 annually.

Viterna earned his bachelor's and master's degrees in agriculture education at the University of Nebraska, Lincoln.

University enrollment shows increase of 244

By The Collegian Staff

K-State's preliminary summer school enrollment figures show an increase over last summer's numbers. At the end of the first day of classes, enrollment was 4,226 students, an increase of 244 students over last year. "If this trend continues," said

Donald Foster, University registrar, 'we should be at 7,000 students or above by the end of the summer."

Last year, enrollment was 3,982 students after the first day of classes and 6,858 students for the entire ses-

The number of students enrolled in each college are as follows: College of Agriculture, 194; College of Architecture and Design, 41; College of Arts and Sciences, 933; College of Business Administration, 604; College of Education, 322; College of Engineering, 483; College of Human Ecology, 226; and College of Veterinary Medicine, 50.

Graduate school enrollment was

1,543 students. Enrollment figures at many state universities also indicated increases. The following statistics were sup-

Wichita State University's summer enrollment jumped from 6,486 students last year to 6,926 this year.

Emporia State University recorded summer enrollment at 2,300 students, a 12 percent increase over last year.

Pittsburg State University received the biggest increase in the number of students - an increase of 14.8 percent. Summer school enrollment was recorded at 2,582 students.

Fort Hays State University showed the smallest enrollment, experiencing a drop in students from last year. After the first full day of classes, enrollment was reported at 1,340 -30 fewer than last year.

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - A car bomb exploded Saturday night in front of a hotel in Durban, killing two white women and wounding 15 other people, as government security forces braced for a weekend of violence.

Blacks plan a nationwide general strike on Monday, commemorating the 1976 riots in the black township of Soweto, but the chief of the Bureau of Information, Dave Steward, said the police and military, armed with new emergency powers, would maintain control.

The government regards Monday as a normal working day," Steward said. "The South African security forces will be in complete control of the situation."

Bureau for Information Brig. Leon Mellet said the bomb placed in a car parked at the Parade Hotel on Durban's main boulevard beside the Indian Ocean exploded shortly before 10 p.m. The blast sent metal ripping into the hotel's bar, an adjoining hotel and two apartment buildings and also damaged about 50 vehicles, he said. No group or individual asserted responsibility for the attack, but South Africa's white-led government has blamed most of the previous terrorist bombings on black nationalist guerrillas of the outlawed African National Con-

Steward stressed South Africa's determination to restrict news coverage and intensify security operations during the nationwide state of emergency.

Without providing figures, he told a news conference in Pretoria the number of violent incidents such as stone throwing and fire-bombings had declined 35 percent compared to the days before the declaration.

He said the government "is not without compassion" for the hundre's of blacks killed in the 1976-77 unrest triggered by the Soweto riots, but contended that some activists have portrayed Monday's 10th anniversary of the uprising as a test of strength with security forces.

Asked about roadblocks, expanded police patrols, and searches of people entering airports and certain government offices, Steward replied: "The security forces will be deploying units in strength during this period. What you've seen is just a tiny, tiny percentage of what we are able to deploy."

In New Brighton, a black township near Port Elizabeth, a local reporter said people were arrested and others were injured when police tried to disperse about 600 mourners marching from a church to a cemetery to bury two riot victims.

It was the strictest clampdown yet on funerals of riot victims. Through nearly two years of unrest over racial segregation in which about 1,700 people have been killed, funerals have become an outlet for black anger and have often triggered clashes with police.

The emergency regulations set up restrictions on press coverage of unrest and political activity, leaving news organizations uncertain about what types of reporting might be illegal.

Betting decreases at Ak-Sar-Ben

By The Associated Press

OMAHA, Neb. - Declines in betting and attendance have caused Ak-Sar-Ben officials to consider seeking changes in state law to permit the organization to operate offtrack betting windows, the attorney for Ak-Sar-Ben said.

The changes also might let Ak-Sar-Ben and other Nebraska tracks provide television coverage of races held at other tracks.

Attorney Robert Skochdopole said the idea is one of several being studied by Ak-Sar-Ben officials looking for ways to halt declines in the mutual handle and attendance. The sluggish agricultural economy and competition from the dog track in Council Bluffs, Iowa, caused the declines, he said.

Members of Ak-Sar-Ben's board of governors and other officials will meet in Kansas City, Mo., nounced that it was reducing or later this month to discuss the problems, he said. Through Friday, Ak-Sar-Ben's attendance was 20.9 percent less than in 1985. Betting was down 26.3 percent from a year ago.

"We budgeted for some decline," Skochdopole said. "But what's happening now is more than what we budgeted for.

"It is of concern, but not of such a concern that we're going to take any precipitous action. Whatever action we take will be studied."

Eugene Conley, a member of the board of governors, said officials also are "looking at every aspect of our operations beyond horse racing - our memberships, our entertainment package, our ability to make scholarships and contributions available."

Conley said Ak-Sar-Ben is concerned about existing competition for the available betting dollar and about future competition as horse tracks open in Iowa and Missouri.

"It's not that we're trying to enlarge gambling or anything of that nature," he said. "We have a very successful track, which has generated a great deal of contributions, which have been financed by our race program."

Skochdopole said that Ak-Sar-Ben has made numberous changes at the track. Those have included exotic wagering such as the Pic-6, Sunday racing, improvements to the grandstand and a reduction of time between races.

"We've done all that and now we're saying, 'What else can we do?""

These employees are working toward a master of science degree in computer science through a program funded by AT&T at a cost of $214,435.

Virgil Wallentine, head of the Department of Computer Science, said employees take graduate courses for five weeks each summer. A master's degree can be earned in five consecutive summers.

"Literally, everyone participating has a bachelor's degree in either computer science, mathematics, engineering or business," Wallentine said. "These students are professionals in their fields. They are advancing their technical skills. We really enjoy having them here."

Employees apply or are selected to be in the program and are screened by AT&T management. They then apply to K-State for admission.

Entrance requirements are the same for these students as they are for any other student," Wallentine said. "We admit approximately 70 percent of the people who apply." Wallentine said in some cases K-State recommends a prospective student get more background in computer science before coming here.

"Some people don't have a concept of how intense this is," said Barbara Parker, a computer auditor for AT&T in Greensborough, N.C. She is Participants in the program take a minimum of six graduate hours every summer and attend regular University classes. "We're in class with regular graduate students," Parker said. "We really like that. It's more like a true college atmosphere."

Students are housed in Goodnow Hall and eat at Kramer Food Center. Computer terminals and personal computers are set up in Goodnow so students can work at any time.

"We're kind of like a family," said Ellen Bailey, also from Greensborough. Bailey works in corporate telecommunications and is a fourth-year participant in the program. Bailey said the living conditions of the students provide a type of support group because everyone is working for the same type of degree in the same amount of time. Wallentine said a student once brought his family to Manhattan for the summer session. He said, however, that this program is set up so that "students can concentrate on this and only this."

Both Bailey and Parker hope to graduate next year, but it is up to the management of AT&T whether they will or not.

"Management can keep you from coming back," Parker said. "The needs of the business come first." If management decides it would not be beneficial for an employee to finish earning the degree, it does not have to send the employee back to school.

The University of Illinois is the only other school that offers a summer master's degree program for AT&T. K-State's program, which began in 1980, emphasizes software and computer engineering. ## Cancer workshop teaches methods to college students from the state

By SANDY WINTER Collegian Reporter

The Center for Basic Cancer Research is planning to teach its research methods to underprivileged college students throughout the state. Terry Johnson, director of the Division of Biology, and Pat Adams, administrative assistant in biology, have organized a cancer biology workshop to educate undergraduate students and their teachers from colleges and smaller universities across Kansas.

The workshop is aimed primarily at the smaller colleges which normally do not have access to hands-on experience with cancer research.

The first workshop, to be conducted next year, will focus on techniques in genetic engineering and research applications of studying cellular heredity and cancers.

Johnson and the Center's staff have designed a four-day, three-part workshop consisting of lectures, lab work and informal presentations.

The workshop, scheduled for January 1987, is expected to attract about 30 undergraduate students and professors from throughout the state, Johnson said.

In the laboratory portion of the workshop, participants will be able to use the equipment in the cancer research laboratories to conduct several tests, he said.

Students will work with chemical reagents and equipment used for gene splicing, Johnson said. They will be staining and directly visualizing both cancerous and noncancerous chromosomes to study genetic defects.

In particular, students will perform the Aames Test, the international standardized test for detecting cancer-causing agents, by utilizing mutations in bacteria, he said. The Cancer Biology Workshop is the first of its kind and was created through what Johnson said he believes is a unique cancer research center. The workshop is co-funded by the Center and the Dane G. Hansen Foundation of LOGAN soon to be famous

"I think K-State's cancer center is unique because it has an interdisciplinary approach to cancer research, involving students from such disciplines as psychology and sociology in cancer research," Johnson said.

"Also, there's no overhead. No staff salaries come out of grants. All contributions to K-State cancer research go fully to funding research," he said.

Undergraduate work in the Division of Biology is largely funded by research grants or by private contributions, he said. More than 3,000 individuals from every state in the nation have provided funds for cancer research at K-State as private gifts.

The Undergraduate Cancer Research Award Program was initiated in 1981, when three $400 awards were presented. This year, 13 $500 awards were presented. The scholarships are used as a salary by the student while he or she pursues research in cancer biology.

Sociology professor to study in Africa

By AMY TAYLOR Collegian Reporter

Many professors dream about the time when their research will be recognized, or when they will receive an opportunity allowing them to study in a different academic environment. For one K-State professor, this dream has become a reality.

Donald Adamchak, associate professor of sociology, has been awarded a two-year Rockefeller Foundation Fellowship in Population Studies

"This fellowship will allow me to look at the relationship existing between population growth and instability in the country of Zimbabwe, Africa. I will be working with the faculty of the University of Zimbabwe, in Harare, and will also be teaching a course in demography," Adamchak said.

The objective of the Rockefeller fellowship is to increase the number of social science experts needed to work in international research programs.

Before Adamchak leaves for Africa, he will take a six-month sabbatical at Georgetown University in Washington, D.C., where he will collect information on the various social structures of the countries of sub-Saharan Africa.

"The data I will compile at Georgetown will consist of everything I can find out about the political, economic and cultural patterns existing in Zimbabwe and surrounding countries," said Adamchak. "With this information, I will be able to apply it to the society of Zimbabwe in January 1987.

Zimbabwe's 96 percent-black population is made up of two ethnic groups: the Shona and the Matabele. The Shona make up three-fourths of the culture, and the Matabele make up the remainder, he said. With the recent violence in other parts of South Africa, Zimbabwe has remained relatively stable, overcoming the severe drought and political unrest present only six years ago, Adamchak said.

"The indications of its stability and the accurate population statistics kept by the government have made Zimbabwe an ideal place to conduct this research," he said. "The stability of the country as a whole can be indicated by the recent immigration of white South Africans from other sub-Saharan countries troubled by political unrest.'

According to Adamchak, the research he will be conducting will be relevant to world powers, such as the United States, in developing policies relating to Third World countries and their modernization.

"The population growth greatly influences the societal structures that contribute to unstable situations," Adamchak said. "A strong policy could be developed to prevent further unrest in these nations.

Contadora treaty may solve conflict

By KATHY CONRADT Collegian Reporter

Peace is likely to come to Central America through the Contadora treaty, said Edward Seaton at the meeting of the Manhattan Alliance on Central America Thursday night. Speaking to 70 people at St.

Isidore's Catholic Church, Seaton, editor and publisher of The Manhattan Mercury, and Jan Flora, associate professor of social anthropology and social work, talked about the Contadora treaty and the future of Central America.

In January 1983, representatives from Mexico, Venezuela, Panama and Colombia met on the island of Contadora to draft a peace treaty for Central America. The terms have since been negotiated and the final draft was written last weekend.

'The chances of it being signed are a little less than 50-50," said Flora. Flora, who recently attended a week-long conference on Central America in Costa Rica, outlined the terms of the treaty. The three major areas of concern and agreement are political, economic and security, she

The political commitments call for political dialogue, democratization, verifiable elections, political party opposition and freedom of speech and assembly, Flora said.

Economic commitments provide for repatriation of refugees under the supervision of the United Nations, a rejuvenation of the Central American common market and increased integration between countries, she said.

The security terms are probably the most important, Flora said.

The treaty plans to reduce, with the hope of eliminating, maneuvers

"We are very confident of our identity - confident enough to be said. That broader scale is NOW's by irregular forces. This is oriented toward Honduras and the United States and would limit the capacity of the United States to have, in effect, permanent bases, Flora said. Maneuvers could not be held within 50 miles of another country without its permission, and the military exercises could not happen more than once a year.

The treaty also requires the elimination of foreign military bases and arms traffic to forces such as the Contras, who are trying to overthrow the Nicaraguan government, Flora

Three commissions to verify and control the implementation of the terms will be set up, and the commissioners will conduct on-site inspections. Flora said the commission will try to resolve disputes, and those which cannot be resolved will be put before the foreign ministers of five Central American countries.

Contadora is the "beginning of a new stage of diplomatic conflict,' Flora said. "Hopefully, the amount of armaments will decrease.

Contadora is intended to stop the United States from invading Nicaragua, Seaton said.

"That's the bottom line," he said. The United States is not a signatory to the treaty, so "there has to be an element of trust." He said there is a question of U.S. security and whether President Reagan is willing to live with the Sandinistas in power.

If the treaty is signed and the United States agrees to the terms, aid to the Contras would have to stop. But, there are 21 objectives and all must be verified and respected by all parties before there is a cessation of aid to the Contras, Seaton said while reading a letter from Rep. Jim Slattery, D-Topeka.

U.S. inactive in opposing Botha

Once again, the Botha government in South Africa has declared a state of emergency, leading to the imprisonment of antiapartheid leaders. And, once again, the Reagan administration is refusing to take any concrete

It is becoming increasingly difficult to accept the administration's lines of "We oppose sanctions. They hurt those we are trying to help."

When considering the body count on both sides, the numbers injured and the number of people imprisoned - both black and white - the U.S. government's statement could raise the question of whom "those" may actually be.

Negotiations were underway, largely through the efforts of a Commonwealth group, but with little positive effect. Two of the group's leaders - former Prime Minister Malcolm Fraser of Australia and Gen. Olusegun Obasanjo, a former Nigerian head of state - have charged the Botha government with pulling back from a "clear opportunity" to pursue peace efforts.

As long as the Reagan administration supports the Botha government, there is little reason for negotiations to be pursued. Administration spokesmen's scoldings from Washington, in all reality, has minimal effect.

Firm, implemented sanctions such as those employed by Canada must be seriously considered.

Traffic snarls won't last forever

Anyone who has ventured toward downtown Manhattan in the last month may have witnessed what could be considered nothing short of a war zone. Wrecking balls and bulldozers are leveling part of the neighborhood in preparation for construction of the Manhattan Town Center as well as the southern arterial project.

Clearing the right-of-way for the southern arterial and diverting traffic away from the Mall construction area is not making the driving situation any less confusing, but, with patience, we may all be able to appreciate that section of Manhattan once it is completed.

Groundbreaking for the $5 million arterial June 10 signaled the beginning of its construction and once the two-mile, four-lane arterial is completed, the south end of Tuttle Creek Boulevard and U.S. Highway 24 will join the eastern end of Fort Riley Boulevard.

Poyntz Avenue, from Third Street east, has been permanently closed, leaving Leavenworth Street, temporarily, as the only access out of the downtown area for motorists attempting to go east on U.S. Highway 24.

Eventually this means Manhattan will have a four-lane street which will connect the city from east to west, the flow of traffic in southeast Manhattan will be more effective and, access to the downtown area will be improved, (which should make business owners on Poyntz Avenue happy).

Although the situation may be confusing and frustrating now, this confusion seems to be a reasonable trade-off for the improvements to be experienced in the future.

Local rabbits threaten revolution

It was early in the morning Monday and I was making my usual turn down the sidewalk between Farrell and Denison halls, when a high, piercing scream cut the air. I do not even remember dropping my bookbag as I sprinted to the source somewhere near Lafene Student Health Center.

Rounding the corner of Seaton Hall, I nearly tripped over the sprawled form of a rather attractive young woman. Obviously unconscious, she looked as though she had fainted on the sidewalk. Kneeling beside her I began to check her vitals.

Suddenly from directly behind me, came a rustling in the bushes. I whirled around, intent upon pegging whoever had harmed this young woman and came face to whiskers with a large gray rabbit...I thought nothing of it at the time.

Chuckling to myself, I returned to tending the pretty girl whose eyelashes were just beginning to flutter. All at once her blue eyes flew upon, her hands grabbed the front of my shirt (ripping off several buttons), and she began sobbing into my chest. Naturally, I held her close and made an attempt to comfort her while assuring her we would find the guy who had done this to her. She just shuddered and said one word into my shirt, something that sounded like

"marbets." All my urging could not make her repeat the word and I only succeeded in making her cry harder. So, seeing Lafene only a few yards away, I decided to let a professional look her over.

Making her comfortable and putting her bookbag under her head, I smoothed the hair out of her eyes and said I would be right back. I was only gone a couple of minutes, but it was enough.

Returning with the doctor I found no trace of the girl. He looked me over skeptically as I frantically assured him I was not lying and then advised me of where I could go next time I found an unconscious woman on the sidewalk

Expressing my own feelings toward his disbelief with exclamation points and hand gestures, I headed back to my bookbag and

A huge black and gray rabbit, that had nearly chewed clear through one strap of my Eddie Bauer, sat almost smugly next to my pack. Thinking obscenities as I hoisted my bookbag, I muttered, "There sure are a bunch of rabbits on campus this spring."

I walked past Farrell contemplating the blue-eyed girl and wondering if I had been at the Horse a little too long last night. The one muffled word she had said to me kept running through my head; marbets...marbets.

Lost in thought, I nearly tripped over something on the sidewalk. Another big gray rabbit was boldly watching me walk away...not just with that vacant animal stare it seemed to be watching me.

Shaking off the feeling as just another part of the strangest morning of my life, I continued on and then stopped dead in my tracks. "Marbets...Rabbits!"

No, it couldn't be true. I know that I must have been zoning. But, since that day, I have come to the conclusion that there is something very strange happening among the rabbits of K-State.

Now I am sure. Yesterday I came upon a group of rabbits which looked suspicious. They scattered as I approached, but I saw their backward glances. In the ground where they had been were some hastily erased markings. One of the most legible read "June 17, R-Day."

K-State is in the middle of the biggest undercover rabbit infiltrations in history. Other markings appeared to pertain to troop movements in and around Anderson Hall and the Union. We must do something about this now, before it is too late. Therefore, I am making a University-wide plea.

Already there have been two attempts on my life: a dagger thrown inexpertly from a bush near Ahearn Field House, and a silenced pistol shot which would have silenced me had it not been for the bravery of a fraternity brother. He saw the pair of ears sticking up over the edge of a sidewalk and took the bullet meant for me.

Now I have a personal score to settle with those rabbits, as does every loyal Wildcat at K-State. The time is now. Good luck.

China to launch satellites for United States

PEKING - A New York company has signed an agreement for China to launch two communications satellites in the next two years, the company said Sunday. Teresat Inc. of New York and the China Great Wall Industry Corp., an affiliate of the Astronautics Ministry, signed the agreement Saturday night in Peking. One satellite is to be launched in the last quarter of 1987, and the other in 1988, both from a launch site in southern China, Teresat said in a news release. China launched its first satellite in 1970, using Long March rockets developed for the nation's ballistic missile defense program. The rockets are too small to carry large satellites, but the Chinese have said they are working to increase their load capacity. China says it has launched 18 satellites using the rockets, with only one failure. Teresat's news release said company Chairman Henry Schwartz and the chiefs of two companies that are Teresat shareholders were "impressed with the overall launcher design, and launch capability and technology of the Chinese satellite launch

Canadian roller coaster crashes; three die

EDMONTON, Alberta - The yellow cars on the Mindbender roller coaster were rushing into the final loop Saturday night when the last car lurched off the track in a roar of screeching metal.

It slammed into a concrete pillar, killing three people and injuring 19. Alberta Labor Minister Ian Reid, whose department handles safety inspections, said the $6 million ride will be "tested and tested and tested" before a decision is made on whether it will be allowed to operate again. Triple Five Corp. of Edmonton, the development firm that owns the mall, shut down its Fantasyland section, where other rides include a vertical roller coaster called The Drop of Doom. The amusement area is to remain closed until the police investigation is finished.

Steve Millward, Alberta's chief elevator inspector, told the Edmonton Journal on Friday his inspectors had concluded the three-month-old attraction was safe.

The Mindbender had been investigated in April after some passengers complained of sore necks and shoulders after their $3 ride, Millward said.

Air Force launches successful missile tests

A cruise missile designed to destroy enemy airplanes on the ground has been successfully tested and, in a separate launch, a 14-year-old Minuteman missile's dummy warheads hit their targets Sunday, Air Force officials said.

The Tomahawk cruise missile flew over White Sands Missile Range in southern New Mexico during the 300 mile, 11/2-hour test Saturday, dropping inert "bomblets" on ground targets, said Bob Holsapple, spokesman for the Cruise Missile Programs in Washington, D.C.

The Department of Defense agency develops cruise missiles for the U.S. Navy and Holsapple said the 18-foot Navy missile is equipped with 60 bombs, each about twice the size of a hand grenade, which drop in clusters over the target area and float to the ground, he said.

He said the weapon enables a single missile to attack multiple targets. On Sunday, the Minuteman III missile was launched from Vandenberg Air Force Base in California and tracked 4,200 miles to the South Pacific, where dummy warheads hit their targets, a spokesman said.

The missile took about 30 minutes to reach targets at the Kwajalein Missile Range, he said.

Missouri end of line for Pony Express ride

ST. JOSEPH, Mo. - C.G. Myers rode into this northwestern Missouri city Sunday to deliver a saddle bag full of mail from Sacramento, Calif., in the final leg of ceremonies marking the 126th anniversary of the Pony Express.

Several hundred people welcomed Myers, the official Missouri rider from St. Joseph, as he pulled up to the Patee House Museum.

The rerun of the Pony Express ride began June 5 in Sacramento. Ten days and eight states later, the mail arrived in St. Joseph, just as it did in 1860. More than 400 riders and their mounts rode day and night to deliver the mail. "It's incumbent on us to consider what it was like to live in those days when the Pony Express run was a routine," St. Joseph Mayor Blair Conley told the crowd. "We need to remember those persons who braved the wild to get the mail through in

Out-of-state helicopter helps in renovation

AUSTIN, Texas - The Texas National Guard couldn't do it in 25 tries, but a husky Mississippi National Guard helicopter came to the rescue Saturday and set the 3,000-pound Goddess of Liberty statue on top of the Texas Capitol

A crowd of several hundred cheered as a "Sky Crane" helicopter flown in from Mississippi eased the new aluminum statue onto its 300-foot-high perch on a pole atop the Capitol dome.

'We do some odd missions, but this is the oddest I've ever done," said Chief Warrant Officer Gary Fisher, pilot of the 18-year-old CH-54A helicopter that got the job done in 10 minutes.

Two weeks ago, a Texas Guard crew using a Chinook CH-47 helicopter was unable to get the 16-foot statue on the dome in 25 attempts over two days because of clouds, wind and a helicopter not suited for the job. The new statue is a replica of the old zinc Goddess, which was taken from the dome - by a Texas Guard helicopter - in November after officials decided the weather-beaten statue had become a safety hazard.

Officials are not sure how the original was placed on the dome 97 years ago.

Shoplifting 'teacher' sentenced to 40 years

FORT WORTH, Texas - A "professional thief" who ran a training school for shoplifters has been sentenced to 40 years in prison for stealing six bottles of men's cologne, authorities said.

Authorities say Paul Edwrd Hood Jr., 31, of Fort Worth operated an underground school, teaching shoplifters techniques on planning escape routes, distracting sales people and pilfering - in exchange for half their take.

When a Tarrant County jury heard about Hood's exploits, including 17 convictions for theft, they gave him 40 years in prison Thursday for stealing six bottles of cologne worth $105 from a local department store.

Criminal District Court Judge John Bradshaw said he was pleased with the verdict. "I just hope some of his students will see this 40-year sentence and think again," he said.

Weekend of entertainment attracts many to Smoky Hill River Festival

It wasn't easy to find a shady spot to rest this weekend in Salina's Oakdale Park.

The 10th Annual Smoky Hill River Festival, which opened Friday morning and closed early Sunday evening, offered a barrage of family-style fun. And although it was hot and typically humid, people came out. Lots of them

The festival attracted 65,000 people, said Lana Jordan, festival coordinator, and most seemed to enjoy the festivities despite the

Friday afternoon, Steven Johnston, 12, of Springfield, Mo., said he was "slightly disappointed" after having spent two hours at the festival constructing what he called "a perfectly engineered Johnston box kite" which wouldn't fly.

"I was running with it, and it was almost up," Johnston said as he wiped a bead of sweat from his brow. "But it crashed into this tree."

"You forgot about your face," said Lisa Johnston, Steven's 7-year-old sister, laughing and pointing to the newly smeared blue star painted on her brother's face. Steven looked at his hand, sighed when he saw the blue makeup, shrugged and headed back to the clown makeup tent for a redo.

"He said he's going to get a patent on his kite," Lisa said. "Then he's going to sell it to his friends."

Lisa told her grandmother what Steven had done. They left their niche under the large shade tree to find him. It took less than a minute for someone else to eye the vacant, shady spot.

This time it was Darla Setter, 17, of Hays, who yelled "I found a place" to her friend, who yelled "I found a place" to her friend, Evie Chaulk. Setter plopped on the ground and waved to Evie, who was slowly edging a baby stroller through the crowd.

"Whew," Chaulk said when she and her son, Davis, finally made it out of the pounding heat. "Let's have some of that tea."

The three stayed only long enough to down a couple sips, then were off to the gazebo area to find an early seat for the Riders in the Sky western show.

The next to find the tree was a small group of children who were following magician Ben Ulin of Los Angeles. Ulin stationed himself under the tree. He named it a "roving tree," letting it be known that he could make the shade a stage whenever he pleased.

The children clustered around Ulin as adults and other children followed the sound of laughter to find the group. Shade trees, though, weren't the only entertaining spots at the festival.

Thirty tents were full of artists and craftspersons demonstrating styles of painting, weaving and furniture making. Rows of food stands offered tastes of different cultures, as well as ever-popular standbys like hot dogs and barbecued beef.

The sidewalks were busy, too. Parents with babies in strollers, a bicycling clown and a rollerskating mime made walking eventful.

One parent found it more difficult to push his stroller through the crowd on the sidewalk than to carry it.

Saturday morning's activities began with two- and five-mile adult races.

Joe and Justin Michael of Wichita pitched a tent near the Bicentennial Center Friday night with the intention of "waking up to hundreds of legs" running toward them. Once the last stake was pounded, a festival volunteer clouded their hopes when he informed them they'd have to move.

Saturday afternoon was filled with shows and activities for children. The crowd peaked at 34,400 Saturday, festival officials said. There was always music of some kind to keep hot and tired adults busy while they waited for Saturday night, when Dizzy Gillespie played host to over 5,000 people.

After the 25-mile bicycle race early Sunday morning, the festival began to wind down. Rod Lake of Topeka won the men's division while his wife, Charlene, won the women's portion.

As the sun went down Sunday, the New Christy Minstrels performed their nationally recognized folk show. As the concert concluded, festival workers began the task of cleaning up after the event-filled weekend.

Rod and Charlene Lake, Topeka, congratulate each other after both won the bike race.

Sarah Blakey, 6, Salina, draws on a sun visor she created in a children's craft area called "Create A Critter."

Wauthier ends era as professor, coach

By JEFF TUTTLE Contributing Writer

After 37 years as a teacher and a coach, Ray Wauthier, associate professor in physical education and golf coach, has put away his grade book and hung up his whistle. He retired from the Department of Physical Education, Dance and Leisure Stuies after the spring semester.

Wauthier began his career at K-State in 1949 after receiving his master's degree in physical education at Drake University and spending four years in the Marine Corps.

Wauthier was hired as an assistant professor in physical education and head baseball coach. He coached baseball until 1964 when he turned the job over to a new coach.

"We didn't have any great teams because we did not get any scholarships," Wauthier said. "But we seemed to always have good, hardworking kids."

Wauthier said he has always believed athletics should be placed second to education.

"Our baseball teams back then only played a 23-game schedule and those games were played on the weekends, so that the kids' education was not bothered," he said.

Wauthier came to K-State at a highly transitional time. Students had been practically sitting on top of each other at Nichols Gymnasium to watch K-State play basketball. Construction of Ahearn Field House was almost complete.

Wauthier recalls the opening of Ahearn as a great step forward for K-State.

'Getting Ahearn was like a little kid at Christmas. We finally had a showplace," Wauthier said. "One can really appreciate Ahearn if they could have seen what it was like in the old Nichols Gym.

Wauthier has seen three university presidents, nine athletic directors and nine football coaches pass through the K-State doors.

His fondest memories are of the athletes, coaches and players who have been a part of his life at K-State. Wauthier recalls Moon Mullins and DeLoss Dodds as two good athletic directors he has coached under at K-State. "Both of those guys did a great job when they were here, and they helped K-State a lot," he said.

As far as coaches, Wauthier remembers Tex Winter as being one of K-State's greatest coaches and educators.

"Tex was really concerned with the kids. Even if his basketball team got back late at night from a road game. Tex would be in the gym the next morning teaching his class," Wauthier said.

When it comes to former players, Wauthier remembers quite a list of

"Lynn Dickey, Steve Grogan, Ernie Barrett and Ray Holder are just a few of the great people I have had a chance to coach, teach and know,"

After teaching the golf class at the University several years, Wauthier was asked to coach the golf team. He has been guiding the golfers for six

"I have always enjoyed golf so I accepted the job when it was offered to me," Wauthier said.

With the golf team's budget not matching up with the rest of the Big Eight schools. Wauthier said he has tried to do the best job he could with what he had to work with.

"I tried to find good, smart kids with a little golf ability for my teams to represent K-State as best as they can," Wauthier said.

Wauthier has also been an instrumental figure in basketball and football officiating in Kansas. He has been an area supervisor for high school and collegiate officials and he has been involved in officiating almost as long as he has been teaching physical education classes.

This past season Wauthier evaluated Big Eight women's basketball referee's for the con-

"I've always had an interest in working with students and around them." Wauthier said. "Staying around young kids tends to keep you feeling young.' He said during retirement he plans to stay in Manhattan in the summer, playing golf and working in his garden. In the winter, he and his wife plan to live somewhere in the Southwest, possibly Arizona.

"I will miss K-State," Wauthier

Floyd collars U.S. Open title

By The Associated Press

SOUTHAMPTON, N.Y. - In this spring of hits by sports' goldie oldies, it was only fitting that Ray Floyd would break out of a wild scramble to become the oldest U.S. Open champion of them all Sunday.

Floyd stalked the leaders - nine of them besides himself who led or shared the lead at one time or another - before taking the lead by himself six holes from the end and guarding it with 24 years' experience that had brought him 19 other victories on the pro tour.

"Realistically, today I felt like I had to do it," the 43-year-old Floyd said after his first victory in the tournament he wanted to win the most. "It was probably my last chance. Maybe not, but probably.'

"Who needs the Seniors Tour"" quipped 46-year-old Jack Nicklaus, who started this revival of aging stars by becoming the oldest man to win the Masters.

Just as Nicklaus had been written off as too old before the Masters and just as 54-year-old Willie Shoemaker had been called over the hill before becoming the oldest to win thoroughbred racing's Kentucky Derby, Floyd thought he was running out of time to win the Open. The oldest previous Open winner was Ted Ray, 43 years, 4 months and 16 days, in 1920. Floyd is 43 years, 9 months and 11 days.

"I felt last night that truly this was it. If I couldn't handle it here, it was very likely it wouldn't happen again," Floyd said, choking back tears. "I had an awful lot of thoughts, emotional as I am now - you'd think could handle this better now after 25 years."

In 21 previous Opens, he had never even been in contention on the final day, finishing no higher than sixth in his first one. In fact, the $115,000 winner's check from the $700,000 purse was more than double the $51,018 Floyd earned in all his other Opens combined. He did it with pride and stonyfaced determination.

KC holds off Angels, 6-5; Quisenberry gains save

By The Associated Press

ANAHEIM, Calif. - When Buddy Biancalana slugged a fifthinning homer in Sunday's Kansas City-California game, he figured his second home run in as many days would be good for some laughs.

After all, with Frank White preceding his blow with a two-run homer and Steve Balboni following it with a three-run shot in the sixth for a 6-0 Royals lead, Biancalana could've gotten lost in the shuffle. He would've been fair game for one-liners about the infamous lack of power that turned him into a cult hero.

"The homer didn't seem that big at the time," Biancalana said with a sigh of relief shared by teammates after the Royals hung on for a 6-5 victory over the Angels.

"We're having trouble holding onto leads," Biancalana continued. "They know I can play this game and hit. But the homers surprise me.

"I got some good swings, and some good pitches to hit."

McRae contemplates life after baseball

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - There's good news for young baseball players - Hal McRae, one of the game's keenest students, may yet become a teacher.

McRae planned for most of his long career on some day packing up everything he's learned and quietly retiring to Florida. But now that his long-awaited life of leisure draws near, the prospect fills him with

"I guess you could say I've changed my mind and would like to stay in baseball," the Kansas City Royals' designated hitter said. "I think I've matured enough to be able to handle young players and do the thing that is most important, communicate with them. Plus, I've learned that I wouldn't be happy just sitting around doing nothing.

In 17 summers in the major leagues, McRae has collected more than 2,000 hits and a wealth of baseball theory and lore. He was never content merely to watch the ball leave the pitcher's hand and try to hit it.

Like a portrait artist experimenting with hues, he has constantly tinkered with swing, stance, grip and follow-through. He has spent thousands of hours exploring the psychological passageways of the pitcher-batter showdown.

His insights, in fact, are so widely respected that pitchers as well as hitters come to him for conversation. He never turns anybody away. But he's also careful not to impose his views on anybody, a lesson he learned the hard way at the feet of the man he calls the master. "If I become a hitting instructor, I would try to use the same approach that Charley Lau used," McRae said. "You can't force anything on a young hitter because if he doesn't believe in it, it isn't going to work. It just isn't going to work. You may have to lay back and wait for him to struggle enough, like Charley did with me."

McRae and Lau, who died several years ago, came together in 1973 after McRae was obtained from Cincinnati in one of the best deals the Royals ever made. While Lau watched patiently, McRae spent the first half of the year tied up in knots.

"I didn't want to communicate with anybody. I thought I knew what was best for me," he said. "It took half a year for me to ask for help." McRae shudders to think what might have happened if ever a modest hitting streak had been

"If I had hit just a little bit, Charley wouldn't have been able to communicate with me at all."

stumbled into.

Ted Williams has said that hitting a baseball is the most difficult thing in sports. To which Arnold Palmer once replied, "That depends on who's throwing the baseball."

"I'd say they both have a point," McRae said with a grin.

Jackson still undecided about future, ponders Royals' offer

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Heisman Trophy winner Bo Jackson's agent said Saturday it may be up to two weeks before the former Auburn star decides whether to sign with the Kansas City Royals or the NFL's Tampa Bay Buccaneers.

Attorney Richard Woods said the decision might come earlier, but that the outcome depended on when Jackson received a final offer from the Buccaneers.

"One piece of the puzzle is hearing from Kansas City and the other is hearing from Tampa Bay," Woods said in a telephone interview from his home in Mobile, Ala. "Bo has said he wants to go fishing for a few days (after the final offers are made) and make up his mind."

Jackson and Woods met Friday in Memphis with top officials from the Royals, including the team's owners, Ewing Kauffman and Avron Fogelman, and General Manager John Schuerholz.

On Friday and Saturday, two other members of Woods' law firm met in Tampa with Buccaneers' owner Hugh Culverhouse and his assistant, Phil Krueger.

Krueger said in a statement Saturday the discussions had been "amicable" and added that both sides had exchanged a number of

"No concrete proposals have been offered by either side at this time." Krueger said. "But in the next few days, solid offers will be discussed."

Woods said one of the main reasons for holding the five-hour meeting with the Royals on Friday was to give Jackson and Kauffman a chance to speak face-to-face.

"Mr. Kauffman had never met Bo and he wanted to get a sense of Bo Jackson as a person," Woods said. "Also, we had discussed a number of concepts and proposals of an offer we needed to further discuss and dot the i's and cross the t's."

Woods said he and Jackson were "very, very happy with the offer of the Royals," but he refused to discuss specifics of the proposal. He said the final decision will depend largely on whether Jackson wants to play baseball or football.

"Football and baseball are obviously different sports and there are pros and cons for both," Woods said. 'He has said he loves both sports and

THERE'S OLDER, AND

Violent Femmes show new direction in concert

By ANGELA O'HARA Staff Writer

Someone once said, "It's better to be hated for who you are than to be loved for who you are not.'

If that someone hadn't come up with it first, the Violent Femmes would have.

Fans clad in everything from vintage clothing to overalls to shorts flocked to Wednesday's standingroom-only Violent Femmes concert at the Uptown Theatre in Kansas Ci-

Gathered inside the lobby, the crowd waited for the concert to begin, not noticing two band members were among them.

"Nobody ever recognizes me," said 5-foot-2-inch Gordon Gano, the Femmes' lead singer and songwriter as he scanned the 1,400-plus crowd at the Uptown before the show. "I like guitarist, sauntered into the lobby, inconspicuously dressed in a pink, button-down oxford shirt and sporting a new hair cut.

A red-haired 17-year-old emerged from the mass, wrapped her arms around Gano's neck, gave him a kiss and thanked him for the six backstage passes he had acquired for her and her friends.

"Hey, do you think you could get me one?" asked a young man standing next to Gano who knew Gano was someone important, but not exactly sure who.

"If I had seen you earlier," Gano said, "you might be kissing me right

Gano laughed, brushed his almost shoulder-length black hair from his face and pushed his silver, wire-rim glasses up on his nose.

'They're getting younger," he said. "We used to have a lot older

That was a concern which followed Gano into the concert. "A lot of people have said we're a teen-agers' band," he said about an hour and a half into the concert.

Gano then addressed the audience on the main floor, populated only by those 21 or older. "What are you all into this music for, nostalgia?"

The reasons fans are turned on to the Femmes are just as numerous as the reasons people enjoy a carnival.

"This band follows no trends at all," Allan Mellske, graduate in architecture, said. "They've transcended trends.'

"It's flawless energy, full of societal insight," Kevin Black, senior in fine arts, said of the Femmes' music. "They're a band to

"Heaven came first, and then there was this band," Ellen Griffith, freshman in journalism and mass communications, said. "They sing lyrics set to today's realm."

Despite a seemingly significant detour in lyrical direction from previous albums, Gano said the new voice is simply a "natural progression of things that gradually happened over a period of time." Some of their songs refer to fathers dropping their children into a well and about everyone finding his own kind of Gano said some songs from the 1986 album, "The Blind Leading the Naked," were written before the other two came out.

"Some of those (songs on the new album) I wrote when I was 15," Gano said. "All of our albums are a combination of different things.'

Despite reason, the lyrical and musical paradox seemed to breed energy during the concert as the crowd rallied to songs from the band's three albums. Older hits struck a chord of intimacy just as much as songs recently receiving air

Gano said, attributing the response to people recently being "turned on" to the album.

Whatever was behind the Violent Femmes' new direction worked. In April, Rolling Stone magazine listed 'The Blind Leading the Naked" as the No. 1 college album.

The sell-out crowd attested to the continued popularity of the aggressive defense of individuality of the Femmes' former albums. The crowd also seemed to accept the more passive conversion to an emphasis on individual belief with the band's new direction reflected in its latest album.

Atop it all, the band professes sincerity amid the clash of ideals combined in its concert performances. Gano said a friend in England told him that anytime a band says something nice about their family, it is perceived as sarcasm.

"It's not that way with us," Gano said. "We're sincere."

Rates help tax reform draw widespread support from the Senate version of the bill. U.S. Senate Majority Leader Bob

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Like a cool drink on a hot day, the sweeping taxoverhaul legislation headed for Senate approval this week has been irresistible.

Veteran legislators can hardly recall when such a complex, farreaching measure has gone through the Senate with such relative ease. But the scope of the measure has proved to be its strength.

"The simple truth is that low tax rates for all taxpayers are more appealing - and more deserving than the restoration of particular tax deductions for particular taxpayers," said Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass.

Possibly as early as Tuesday, the Senate will complete work on the measure that would slash individual and corporate tax rates while paying for the reductions by eliminating or reducing numerous deductions and exemptions. Senate leaders have routinely been predicting the vote on final passage will be 100-0.

A potent combination of tactics and occurrences have come together to produce that anticipated result.

First, the legislation is offering lower rates.

The bill would compress more than a dozen existing individual tax brackets to two - 15 percent and 27 percent. The top rate is now 50 percent although few taxpayers actually pay that rate.

The top corporate rate would be lowered from 46 percent to 33 per-

MONDAYS

Sen. Bob Packwood, R-Ore., the prime architect of the package and chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, has said, "The absolute glue that holds this bill together is the rates.'

Sen. John H. Chafee, R-R.I., a Finance Committee member agreed saying, "The driving engine of the bill is the low rates.'

The low rates have attracted the support of many business and industry leaders, who have said they are willing to give up some tax breaks in exchange for the lower tax

Packwood also used the lower rates to help fend off attempts to restore the deductibility of contributions to Individual Retirement Accounts, a popular tax break for in-

"You can argue that the best way (to encourage retirement savings) is to leave people with more money in their jeans" through lower tax rates, Packwood said.

In addition, the legislation has been considered on the Senate floor under rules that make it difficult to offer an amendment that does not affect those rates or an interest another senator is trying to protect.

Anyone offering an amendment to restore a tax break must also include a proposal for raising enough money to pay for the change to keep the overall bill from adding to the budget deficit. That means that winning something would mean taking something away from someone else or increasing those rates, which have become all but sacrosanct.

The personality of the Finance Committee also is being credited as a factor in rallying support in the

One senior senator, who asked not to be quoted by name, said the panel is balanced and does not include members of "the screaming right and the screaming left. ... It's not a bunch of wild men.

Thus, the group was open to producing a radical bill and the rest of the Senate trusted the legislation.

Indeed, the radical nature of the bill is another of the things being credited with keeping the overhaul effort alive.

"A little bit of tax reform was not going to go anywhere," Boren said.

Conn., said he expected a House-Senate conference committee to restore the deduction, eliminated

"I think it's unfair, yes," said Dole. "I don't know where it's going to come out, but I would say it's not going to be as it is in the Senate bill."

State officials say abolition of the deduction translates into about $300 million a year that Connecticut residents wouldn't be able to deduct from their federal taxes. Connecticut has a 71/2 percent sales tax but no state income tax.

Afghans request U.S. notice

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan assured Afghan rebels of an unshakeable commitment Monday, but disdained the idea of formal U.S. diplomatic recognition of the resistance movement, the White House said.

"Our goals are identical: the freedom of Afghanistan," spokesman Larry Speakes quoted Reagan as telling four leaders of the Afghan rebels, adding:

"The Soviets must not believe that aggression pays. A peace agreement cannot work unless the alliance (of resistance fighters) is consulted and the Afghan people support it.'

Reagan reportedly reiterated the U.S. position that any settlment must provide for withdrawal of all Soviet troops and a method of permitting the Afgans to determine their own form of government.

The Afghan leaders came to the capital to launch a full-court press for increased U.S. moral and political support. But Reagan refused to discuss any details of his meeting, saying, "I won't take any questions because we have only a very brief time for our meeting."

Speakes said that Burhanuddin Rabbani, leader of the Jamiat-i-Islami, an Afghan rebel faction, told Reagan of "casualties and atrocities" inflicted by the Soviets, but expressed the rebels' determination to fight on.

At the end of his presentation, Speakes said, Rabbani "indicated that he would like to have official diplomatic recognition of the resistance effort.'

"Sorrowful as it is, the resistance of our people has not been recognized officially," he quoted Rabbani as telling Reagan.

The spokesman said Reagan replied that recognition is an important issue but would be "premature to resolve now.

Speakes explained that maintaining U.S. diplomatic representation in Kabul, Afghanistan's capital, "plays a role in our efforts to be helpful to the resistance and our efforts to continue working with the Afghan people to overcome the Soviet aggression."

Earlier, during a speech to U.S. backers of counter-revolutionaries fighting the leftist Sandinista government in Nicaragua, Reagan talked optimistically of chances of winning congressional approval of $100 million in assistance to the rebels there, also known as Contras.

He predicted that a House vote next week "will signal the re-

Terrorism in U.S. diminishes

By The Associated Press

SAN JUAN, Puerto Rico - A Reagan administration terrorism expert told U.S. mayors Monday that while Americans are the No. 1 targets of international terrorism, attacks inside the United States are on the decline.

Robert B. Oakley, ambassador at large for counterterrorism, said at the annual convention of the U.S. Conference of Mayors that there had the United States in 1985, none with international connections.

U.S. law enforcement officials broke up 23 attempts before they could be carried out, he said. "For the past decade, U.S. citizens and installations have been far and away the number one target for terrorists," he said. "Inside the United States, the trend has been just the reverse. The number of terrorist incidents steadily since 1982, he said.

Oakley's remarks were aimed at American mayors concerned about the possibility of international terrorists striking in their cities.

The more than 150 mayors will consider a resolution Wednesday, the last day of the convention, calling for the federal government to clarify jurisdictional responsibilities between the FBI and local police in the event of terrorism.

The resolution also encourages been only seven terrorist incidents in cities "to engage in intelligencegathering efforts that will assist in preventing terrorist incidents."

Oakley, in an interview, said he did not want to tell mayors their concerns were unfounded but that there was little sign to indicate that terror was being imported to the United

In 1984, 28 Americans were killed in international terrorism, Oakley said. "I'm sure more than that were killed as a result of violence in (New in the United States has declined York City's) Central Park," he said.

"One is too many, but terrorism is political theater, and the idea is to magnify this and have a profound shock effect."

Oakley is a career diplomat who once was a National Security Council adviser to the president specializing in the Middle East.

He said the State Department believed Libyan leader Moammar Gadhafi "has gone into shock" in the aftermath of the U.S. bombing raid

There has been "a marked reduction in Gadhafi-supported terrorism, apparently due to internal Libyan disarray, the compromise of Libya's external terror network and the tighter controls placed upon Libyan activities all around the world," Oakley said.

He said one reason for Gadhafi's reaction may be the So riet Union's lack of help for Libya in opposing the raid. "They just bugged out," he

Agent explains students' insurance

By The Collegian Staff

In order to clarify the status of student insurance coverage at facilities other than Lafene Hospital, a representative of Keystone Life insurance has provided information to assure students they are covered.

Clyde Campbell, 3016 Conrow Drive, said the policy issued by Keystone does provide insurance for policyholders in institutions other than Lafene. As an example, he showed the Collegian a computer printout showing that the policy had paid $38,471.50 of a $40,803.50 claim involving both Lafene and a Topeka institution.

The comprehensive major medical coverage section of the existing Keystone policy states:

"When an insured person incurs reasonable covered expenses within fifty-two (52) weeks immediately following the date of the accident or first treatment for sickness, benefits shall be paid as follows:

$100 deductible per accident or sickness for care received anywhere other than at Lafene Student Health Center. (If care is received at Lafene Health Center, the deductible does not apply and benefits are 100 percent payable up to maximum of $200 per accident or sickness for covered expenses and therefore payable as stated below.)

After the deductible is met, benefits will pay 80 percent up to $5,000 for covered expenses.

Thereafter benefits will pay 100 percent up to an aggregate lifetime maximum of $50,000 per accident or sickness for covered expenses.

"All students who pay the student health fee and who are registered full-time students are eligible for this plan," according to a brochure provided by Campbell.

Keystone is a third party administrator for the program, which is underwritten by Firstmark Standard Life Insurance Co., Indianapolis.

The existing policy is to be replaced Aug. 22 with a program from Blue Cross & Blue Shield of Kansas.

Campbell said the University should "hold some type of educational lecture...so students can get some education on the type of insurance they are buying.

"It should be presented so students can make some sense of what they are buying," he said.

Emergency continues

South Africa restricts news coverage

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa - Millions of blacks stayed away from work Monday, the date on which a bloody uprising began in Soweto in 1976, but the government said its state of emergency thwarted plans for "a day of anarchy."

Black activist Winnie Mandela was given a government order instructing her not to speak to journalists and to stay home at night. "It's just like being back in prison again," she said. The goverment said the order would apply until Friday.

The broadest restrictions ever imposed on news coverage in South Africa were announced before dawn. They kept reporters out of Soweto, a black city of 1.5 million people near Johannesburg, and all other black townships and banned reports on action by security forces. Louis Nel, the deputy information minister, said early in the day that

"plans to turn June 16 into a day of anarchy have been foiled."

An aide, Leon Mellet, said soldiers and police "are on standby at every possible place where trouble could be expected, anywhere in the country."

Residents in Soweto and in eastern Cape Province townships outside Port Elizabeth said some youths blocked roads after nightfall with barricades of burning tires and

Other residents, reached by telephone after a 24-hour break in service ended, said most areas appeared quiet.

A Soweto resident said small groups of young blacks chased and stoned cars belonging to some of the few residents who went to work and some gunfire was heard.

Bishop Desmond Tutu, the black Anglican cleric who won the 1984 Nobel Peace Prize, told a church memorial service that the prohibition of non-church gatherings was "grossly insensitive and highly provocative.

'They are trampling our dignity underfoot and rubbing our noses in the dust," he told an audience of about 500 whites and a few blacks in downtown Johannesburg.

The government imposed the nationwide emergency at 12:01 a.m. last Thursday, claiming black radicals planned attacks and rampages. Monitoring groups said police rounded up nearly 2,000 people opposed to apartheid, the race policy that preserves supremacy for South Africa's 5 million whites and denies rights to the 24 million blacks. Nel said President P.W. Botha's government considered Monday "a normal working day" and would make sure blacks who wanted to work could do so.

He said 21 of the 31 people killed since the emergency was imposed died at the hands of other blacks and only seven were killed by security forces. Two whites and an Indian were killed and 69 people wounded by a car bomb explosion Saturday night in Durban.

Ray Swart, a liberal opposition member of Parliament, said the white authorities were "outdoing the gentleman of the Kremlin. For the vast majority of South Africans, what the state president had implied .. would be the consequences of a communist takeover were already reality in this country.

Government orders forbid reporting the response by security forces to violence in the townships, as well as police and army movements.

Mandela, whose husband Nelson has been in prison since the early 1960s, said was at her home in Soweto when she learned of the restrictions against her.

Speaking by telephone to The Associated Press, she said: "I am to be restricted to my house from 6 p.m. to 8 a.m. I am also forbidden from giving interviews to the press and all that sort of junk.

Blacks stayed home Monday or went to small church services, the only commemorative gatherings allowed.

The Soweto uprising began June 16, 1976, with demonstrations by school children against a new law directing that they be taught in Afrikaans, the language of the white Afrikaners who control the govern-

At least 575 blacks were killed, according to official figures, in violence that spread across the country for more than a year. The "Soweto Uprising," as many call it, subsided late in 1977 after the government banned 19 organizations and put restrictions on dozens of anti-apartheid leaders. A drivers' strike stopped bus services for blacks in Johannesburg and Pretoria that normally carry 700,000 passengers a day.

Hein to manage coliseum

By JENNY CHAULK Staff Writer

Charles Hein, K-State's director of communications, will become the acting director of the proposed Fred E. Bramlage Coliseum, effective Wednesday.

The position of director of communications is being phased out. The duties of this position will be taken over by the vice president for institutional advancement, a new position created by President-elect Jon Wefald.

"K-State's a neat place," Hein said. "I've enjoyed it and I regard my work here as a special opportunity as well as an opportunity to work in the same administration as Duane Hein has been director of communications since August 1982. On coming to K-State, Hein said he believed the office of communications needed to be expanded and made more visible. Under his leadership, a plan for University satellite communications-has been set up.

This plan would enable a "fullfledged TV production house to be constructed," Hein said. Programs could be created here and up-linked to communications satellites, allowing persons having a satellite dish to receive the programs. Hein said this would benefit agencies such as Cooperative Extension and public schools.

be voting on funding for the project next week. Hein said about $5.2 million to be spread over a four-year period has been requested for the project. "I'm very pleased that we've made a real push to expand K-State's visibility in the national media," Hein said.

The Kansas Board of Regents will

He cited The Washington Post and The Wall Street Journal as major publications featuring articles about the University since he has been here. A K-State science magazine called Perspectives has also been developed.

Hein said a system of communications that depends less upon press releases and concentrates more upon telephone information, tip sheets and menus has been implemented.

He also said that a "modest radio system that directly feeds University news to stations" has been established.

Hein said he is looking forward to his new position as acting director of the coliseum

"We need to begin developing policies and procedures for the operation of the coliseum," Hein said. Even though the coliseum has not yet been built, he will "line up revenue-producing events so that the University is ready to go when the building opens," he said. The coliseum project will be re-bid in August.

Hein said he supports Wefald's decision to consolidate the office of communications with other offices under the vice president of institutional advancement.

"It's critical in any major institution to bring all units that deal with public relations and recruitment together into a single University office so that they can all move very quickly in the same direction," Hein said. "Every president should be entitled to have the opportunity to select people to make up his administration.

"Jon Wefald inherits big shoes to fill and he can do it if all of us stand with him," Hein said. "I wish him well.

The deadline for applications for the position of vice president for instituitional advancement is Friday. Specific duties of this position include supervising the directors or unit heads of enrollment management, development and alumni affairs, and public relations and communications.

Regents consider funding

University site of new satellite system

By JILL HUMMELS Campus Editor

In mid-May, K-State was encouraged by the Kansas Board of Regents to submit a priority budget request for a $5.1 million satellite telecommunications system.

K-State requested a multimillion dollar appropriation to be spread over four years, said Charles Hein, director of communications. The appropriation request will be written into the Regents' budget request being prepared this month for later legislative consideration.

The Regents' Special Committee on Agriculture and Economic Development, which recommended K-State be the home of the proposed new system, also recommended that other Regents schools be allowed to utilize the system when necessary. The committee stipulated that all courses - both credit and non-credit be coordinated through the Regents office in Topeka. The project - sought after by all of awarded to K-State which proposed telecasting of Cooperative Extension and Continuing Education courses, as well as programs from other state schools and agencies. If funding is granted, the system will be known as the Educational Communications Center, Hein said.

Among other possible uses, the center, which would be able to broadcast both live and videotaped programs, could be used by the College of Veterinary Medicine and the University of Kansas Medical Center to transmit health care information and to conduct in-service training for their respective professions, the project proposal says.

"The uplink transmitter and 105 receive-only dishes located in Cooperative Extension offices in every county and five more at area health centers for use by the KU Medical Center, would be the nucleus of the Center's delivery system. However, the signal transmitted from the Center could be received anywhere in North America," the

The multimillion dollar on-campus facility would be strengthened by a mobile production unit which could travel around the state for onlocation production work, the proposal says.

"Using the Regents Telenet and Telebridge telephone conferencing apparatus already in place at K-State, the Center would provide one-way video/two-way audio conferencing, classes, meetings and other programs," the proposal says. With the installation of fiber optics currently underway on campus, technology would allow transmissions to be sent to every building on

If the budget plan is approved by the Legislature, K-State would receive $1.5 million in fiscal year 1988 to begin setting up the telecommunication facilites, Hein said.

"The initial request is for the equipment and personnel we would need to run the facilities," said Hein, who was chairman of the project proposal committee.

Equipment would include broadcast quality cameras and computer graphics equipment, he said. Part of a subsequent appropriation would be used for the purchase of a $560,000 satellite uplink, needed to transmit TV signals to a satellite which then transmits a signal back to the earth stations or satellite dishes.

During the second year, the staff size would increase to 11 and equipment worth $1.4 million would be added. Thereafter, the staff size would be maintained, but new equipment appropriations would decrease.

A building to house the facilities would have to be constructed. An appropriation of $3.5 million would be needed to cover the construction of the building, which would be designed around the needs of the video production equipment, the proposal

It would contain sound isolated rooms, a cooling and ventilation system and a Halon gas fire protection system.

The total budget for the center and the building is more than $8.6

By KAREN SCHULER Collegian Reporter

University Telecommunications has begun to incorporate fiber optics into the communications network on Fiber optics are small tubes which transfer light instead of transmitting electrical signals. On one end is a low-power laser with a detector on the other end. Since fiber optics transfer light instead of energy, the speed of transmission is increased.

"A single fiber can carry hundreds of voice connections at once so it cuts down on bulk," Robert Young, telecommunications specialist, said.

The installation of fiber optics is part of a statewide project involving K-State, the University of Kansas, KU Medical Center, Wichita State University, Fort Hays State University and the state offices in Topeka.

Young said there are three aspects of the program, with one being to upgrade and replace current telephone equipment. Another is to rewire all campuses with universal, standardized wiring. Standardized wiring is preferred, Young said, "so when offices move from room to room we don't have to run new wires. When people from other places come in, they will be familiar with the system.'

With new twisted pair copper wiring, which will work in conjunction with the fiber optics, an adapter box could be used with the telephone jacks to hook up to computers on campus. The new wiring will be placed in academic and administrative buildings and residence halls.

The rewiring began in April and is scheduled to continue until August 1987. The forestry building, housing office and Ahearn Field House have been completed. Rewiring began in the residence halls when school was out in the spring. "The buildings of high traffic areas - Lafene, the Union and others - will be done (rewired) during vacations...probably winter," Young said.

The rewiring is being done by Southwestern Bell, with the equipment installation being completed by the telecommunications staff. The staff will also keep records of the wiring system. Young said in the past AT&T and Southwestern Bell kept records of the wiring up to the outside of the buildings but there was no record of how each building was wired inside.

'This will make it easier for repair," Young said. The wires go to three buildings: the power plant, West Hall and the Veterinary Medicine Complex, with the fiber optics system operating between them, he said.

Young said a person could call from Anderson Hall to the Chester E. Peters Recreation Complex and the call would go over the twisted pair wires to West Hall, and then travel over the fiber optic cables to the Vet Med Complex, and then transfer back to twisted pair wires to continue on to the Rec Complex.

The cost of the project is approximately $1.7 million. "$1.7 million may sound like a lot, but spread out over eight years and over the number of phones we have

(on campus) it's not that bad," Young said.

The third aspect of the project is to obtain a new switching service in hopes of getting better control of price increases.

Bids have been sent out for an eight-year contract to obtain a new switching system.

One option, Young said, would be to have Southwestern Bell continue to operate from the building it is now in. The other, he said, would be to have a company put a system on campus and the only calls that would go to Southwestern Bell would be offcampus calls.

The purpose of the bids is to find a company that can provide equivalent services with small price increases over eight years.

The project, basically, is handled through the Bureau of Telecommunications in Topeka. Smaller groups allow the bureau and Southwestern Bell perform the work. But larger institutions with telecommunications staffs, such as K-State, have more input in the process.

PUTT-PUTT

Parthefunelit Forthefunelit' Porti

The Bureau handled the bids for the rewiring and Southwestern Bell is rewiring for everyone participating in the project. The same will be done with the bids for the new switching service.

The new system will allow a more updated phone system and new equipment will help reduce the number of breakdowns. Most phones on campus are about 20 years old and are hard to fix and get parts for, Young said.

'We have been talking to department heads to see what systems they have now, and see what would be equivalent or better," he said.

PBS, KTWU to offer alternative programs

By TODD NIGHSWONGER Arts and Entertainment Editor

Summer traditionally is a time to go out and enjoy the various types of entertainment and activities offered. But many may not realize that an abundance of entertainment is available right in the home.

nalysis

Public television is an alternative many people do not take advantage of but is available free of charge. And this summer's lineup is a blockbuster with something for everyone.

The viewing this summer on public television will heat up with new series, many new specials and returning favorites like "Alive from Off Center," "Even-ing at the Pops" and "Master-piece Theatre." The programs can be viewed on Topeka's KTWU (Channel 11).

The new series are "American Masters," "Comrades," "National Audubon Society Specials" and "American Playhouse Movie Festival."

Academy Award-winning actress Joanne Woodward will host "American Masters," a 15-part series profiling achievements of some of America's native-born and adopted masters in the creative arts such as Charlie Chaplin, Billie Holiday, Philip Johnson and Katherine Anne Porter. The series will air at 8 p.m. Mondays, starting next week.

"Comrades" will profile the lives of citizens in the Soviet Union. The 11-part series, set for 8 p.m. Tuesdays beginning July 1, will look at the lives of a Moscow teacher, Siberian hunter, Estonian fashion designer and Uzbek architect, among others.

The Audubon series, which airs at 7 p.m. July 20 and at 2 p.m. Aug. 11, will explore the California condor, on the brink of distinction, and the black-footed ferret, the rarest mammal in North America.

The 10-part movie festival will have encore movies and dramas originally broadcast in the first four seasons of "American Playhouse." Air times are Saturdays at 9 p.m. starting June 28.

Providing the widest array of entertainment will be "Alive from Off Center," which begins on July 5 and runs nine consecutive Saturdays at 10:30 p.m.

Specials include "Justice for All." a one-hour documentary on the Justice Department under Attorney General Edwin Meese III, which will air at 8 p.m. July 2.

"The Statue of Liberty" tells the story of the statue as a gift from the French to the American people. The one-time program will run at 7 p.m. July 2.

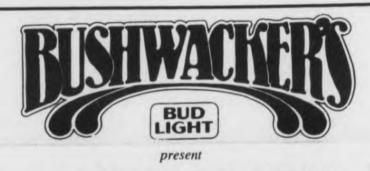

The National Symphony will perform from the lawn of the U.S. Capitol in "A Capitol Fourth" at 10 p.m. July 4.

A timely topic will be discussed on "Growing Up With Rockets." This one-hour special documents the story of America's space program through the personal commentary of a girl who grew up in Cape Canaveral, Fla. It will air at 8 p.m. July 9.

This by no means gives a complete listing of what's available on public television. It does, however, give a good account of the variety of entertainment found as close as the nearest television set by checking the listings each week

Public television is an alternative source of entertainment providing clean, wholesome viewing that can, and should be, taken advantage of by people of all

Wood: a violin's tonal key

By PATRICIA MALONE Contributing Writer

While it may be hard for some to believe that an 18-inch violin could be worth as much as a new BMW sports coupe, the instrument's materials are determining factors toward its value.

Adrian Bryttan, assistant professor of music, said the quality of the instrument depends on the quality of the wood.

"An expert must work with the wood. They have to make sure it doesn't have any knots in it, or it isn't going to split. They must shape it the right way and make sure it has the right weight and balance," Bryttan said.

He said violins are made of Pernambuco wood, which is becoming rare and is available only from South America.

"The problem right now is not that the makers don't know how to make good fiddles, but that it's hard to find old, aged wood," Bryt-

The most valuable violins today. Bryttan said, are antique instruments produced by Italians. These include Guarnerius, Amati, Guadanini and, the most wellknown, Stradivarius.

"These (Stradivarius) fetch the most money at auctions. The top one, I think, went at $400,000," Bryttan said. "Part of the reason why Strads and other old Italian strings sound so good is because of the time factor. They've been around for 100 to 200 years and the wood has aged. Since they've been played so much, the wood has set." No one really knows why

"Strads" sound so good, but they do have some ideas, Bryttan said. "They have an idea that it has to do with the measurements, how thick the wood is," he said. Bryttan said another mystery not yet solved concerns the kind of varnish used on the Stradivarius in-

"Lots of people have done all sorts of chemical tests. They've taken little chips of old Strads and tried to analyze what exactly is in the varnish," Bryttan said. "They've run carbon-dating tests and all that isotope business.

The quality Italian instruments can be expensive, with even the bows capable of costing a small for-

"You can get bows for $100 and $200 but that's just junk," he said. "For a really good bow, you'd have to spend $2,000.

"When I was a student in 1970, I was using an old Italian instrument that was appraised at $25,000. Two years later it was appraised at $35,000," he said.

"It's a tremendous investment. Unfortunatly, there are a lot of people who collect instruments and they don't play them," Bryttan said. "I know a lot of cases where people have a lot of money, buy bows and just have them hanging on the wall or stick them in a safe. They may have 10 to 15 and wait till the prices go up.

"They really are works of art,"

The University owns an original Guadanini which is valued at about $25,000. The instrument is thought to be 200 years old, Bryttan said.

"K-State also has some cellos, bases and bows that are very high. One of our bows is over 100 years old," Bryttan said.

He said although there are some imitations of Stadivarius violins circulating today, the originals have all been found. He said people will often bring in a dusty violin from their attics, thinking it is an original Stradivarius

But, Bryttan said, the fact is that there were only 200 to 250 "Strads" built and have all been accounted

Laughter highlights 'day off' escapades

Film Review

John Hughes' comedy is an excellent way to ward off the heat, problem classes and anything else that may be the cause of the blues. It's a great way to spend two hours escaping from the real world. It will definitely make you laugh, which after all is the key to curing whatever ails you.

The center of the film is Ferris, a high school senior about to graduate unless the principal has his way. Ferris is so popular that everyone likes him, everything always works out for him and the school secretary describes him as being "a righteous

Matthew Broderick ("Wargames" and "Ladyhawke") as Ferris is the key to believing the character and this movie. He manages to be funny, intelligent and human as he moves through the maze of Ferris' life and escapades, even if the situation seems a little far-fetched. The rest of the cast supports Broderick very well including Mia Sara ("Legends") as his cheerleader girlfriend, Sloan.

Anyone in high school should probably steer clear of this marvelous look into secondary education - it might give someone too many good ideas. Those of us who have finished with that era of our lives will wish the movie had been released years ago so we could have taken advantage of the ideas designed to drive a principal crazy. It also should be a good experience for all the teachers in town this summer - you can see what you're up against this fall.

The film opens on Ferris and his parents - he's supposed to be sick and they decide he should stay home. It's all a ploy so Ferris can take advantage of the beautiful day. Besides, he's been absent nine times this semester, and it might be his last chance.

Ferris enlists the aid of his best friend, Cameron (Alan Ruck), a neurotic hypochondriac with a lessthan-ideal family situation, to provide transportation. Then Sloan is sprung from class by the never-fail excuse of a death in the family. Don't be fooled. An excuse it may be, but it is the means used to execute a series of events that capture the audience throughout the entire day. Ferris' sister, Jeannie, isn't too thrilled with her brother getting away with everything and never getting caught. She is one of his major protaganists throughout the film, but she also is the typical younger sister. She can hate her brother, but heaven help anyone else who does. It's a prime example of sibling rivalry at its best

The entire movie is a treat to the eye. Make sure to watch the background. There are several instances when the camera is focused on one portion of the screen and your attention should be on another portion. The scenery of Chicago and the various stops along the way are well photographed, as is the parade Ferris participates in.

One word of warning. The film uses "asides" - usually a stage technique of stopping the action or having the character step out of the action to talk directly to the audience. Ferris turns to the audience with words of advice or explanation throughout the show with tremendous results.

Broderick's ability to attain a conversational tone and the rest of the cast's ability to cope with the interruptions are great. It's an unusual technique, but it works. The only time it is somewhat disconcerting is when graphics are added to the screen to show a list Ferris is referring to. It's a little too much in the way of visual aids

"Ferris Bueller's Day Off" is a great way for your day to seem like a day off. One more thing - stay until the very last frame. The credits roll on one half of the screen and the movie continues on the other half, similar to the technique Burt Reynolds has used in several of his movies. But "Ferris" uses new footage, not outtakes.

If you usually head for the door before the credits begin, don't. You'll miss yet another great bit of comedy if you do. Enjoy.

Drinking age affects Aggieville establishments

By STACEY DARRELL Collegian Reporter

Soon, even the 19-year-old drinking age will be a thing of the past - and the 3.2 tavern may follow in its footsteps. On July 1, 1986, the minimum age for drinking for alcoholic beverages in Kansas changes to 20.

This year's age change is part of legislation gradually increasing the drinking age to 21, with an increase of one year in age over a period of two years. The first increase - from 18 to 19 — went into effect last July 1.

Although many local tavern owners are aggravated with the state's decision to increase the drinking age, they are dealing with the situation. Federal officials have threatened cuts in highway funds unless the state enacts acceptable legislation.

By July 1987, all of the drinking establishments surviving the changes in age laws may become clubs, but until that change occurs, the 3.2 taverns are approaching the situation in several different ways.

Kite's Bar and Grille, 619 N. 12th St., has already taken the transition toward a club-type operation. Terry Ray, owner of both Kite's and Mr. K's, 710 N. Manhattan Ave., said the bar has always been the place for returning K-State alumni to go. The club aspect will offer more for the alumni than in the past, he said.

federal government mandated the age change, but we have to live with what is handed down to us," Ray

Ray said he plans to leave Mr. K's, which offers live entertainment and dancing, a 3.2 drinking tavern until a market no longer exists.

Don Ramey, owner of The Dark Horse Tavern, 619 N. Manhattan Ave., and Bushwacker's, 531 N. Manhattan Ave., said the July 1 age change will knock Dark Horse's business down about 25 percent. Ramey also said Dark Horse will remain a 3.2 establishment as long as a market exists. Dark Horse will be featuring live bands and a few "surprise promotions" in the future, Ramey said.

Geoff Gobble, manager of Brother's, 1120 Moro St., said the July 1 change will affect Brother's, but it will not be as detrimental to his establishment as some of the other 3.2 taverns

K-State would benefit by satellite

In 1924, K-State had a "college of the air." Information from the college was broadcast over a powerful radio station. K-State could educate the sons and daughters of not only Kansas, but many other states — in other words, fulfill its land-grant mission.

Soon K-State may have yet another much-needed tool at its disposal — a satellite communications system. In May, a Kansas Board of Regents committee gave the University approval to proceed with planning for a video production facility and a satellite uplink to transmit educational programs.

The satellite project brings with it promises of great potential—teleconferences with businesses or agencies, large-scale continuing education courses, interstate classes—that will eventually benefit not only K-State but also the other Regents institutions and the state itself.

If properly controlled, K-State can only prosper by having the proposed Educational Communications Center. Not only would it showcase the intelligence and talent of the University, it would familiarize a wider audience with K-State's existence and opportunities available here.

The center could be a marketing tool as well as an educational tool. The administration should use it judiciously, but with the conviction of an individual intent on defying death. It is a tool that, in all probability, will be necessary to the future success of K-State.

Upcoming election offers variety

With the final filings for political aspirants now passed, the upcoming August primary elections and bond issue for the city promise to offer voters a summer of either dismay or excitement depending on one's ideology.

ment depending on one's ideology.

In the 1st District seat for the Riley County Commission, Manhattan residents Nancy Bammes and Paul Bosch will face off to determine which candidate will represent Democrats in the November general election. The winner of the August primary will run against Republican candidate Wilton Thomas.

Manhattan voters will also be allowed to decide the fate of the $2.8 million "Quality of Life" bond. Passage of the bond issue would allow construction of 100-acre outdoor recreation complex near the intersection of Hudson and Anderson avenues and other recreational facilities.

On the statewide level, Republican Party members will be deciding on who will run for governor against Democrats Tom Docking and John Montgomery.

Regardless of the outcome, the keen interest in public service should allow an open and robust discussion of the issues. Kansans can be certain that those at county fairs, holiday celebrations and the like should have little problem in getting a glimpse of the politicians.

Sports success increases enrollment

With the University Missouri-Kansas City's commitment to put a National Collegiate Athletic Association Division I basketball team on the court for the 1987-88 season, K-State gains a new area rival.

UMKC's move into big-time college athletics is just part of its efforts to move into the big time as an educational institution. The school is also building a $12.6 million multipurpose building and a $7.6 million business school building in an effort to increase its enrollment.

To educational purists, pumping money into college athletics in order to pump the university's enrollment might seem a little bit perverse. It just takes a glance at the University of North Carolina at Charlotte's enrollment increase following its addition of a Division I basketball program to see why it can work for UMKC.

UNNC went Division I for the 1970-71 season and in the 1976-77 season it landed in the Final Four and received the press attention that the program's founders had sought for the school.

After years of respectability on the hardwood, UNNC's enrollment bulged from 9,000 in 1979 to 15,000 last year. That's an increase of 167 percent. If K-State had that type of increase, its enrollment would be 30,000.

Naturally, it took more than just winning basketball games to increase UNNC's enrollment so substantially, but just like at UMKC, basketball was part of an entire university-improvement program.

UMKC is in a unique position for success.

Kansas City is a rarity — a major city which lacks either a pro basketball team or a Division I college program.

And when Michael Russell, president of UMKC's Athletic Association, last year began looking into going Division I, he studied other big-city university programs such as Louisville, Houston, Alabama-Birmingham, Georgetown, Miami (Fla.) and Texas-San Antonio.

His findings were very positive concerning the effects a basketball program can have upon the way locals perceive a university and the amount of money local businesses are willing to kick into the school's coffers.

UMKC was off and running. Now that program is out to prove once again that the name familiarity that one Patrick Ewing can bring a school is worth all the respect a good law school can attain.

Russell is a Wichita State graduate, so there is a natural tie to basketball involved. He knows that the success of the Shockers in

He knows that the success of the Shockers in the early 1980s brought the school the kind of national attention it wanted. Now Russell wants to help UMKC's 10,000-student enrollment multiply by copying other big city programs.

Alabama-Birmingham's athletic director and basketball coach Gene Bartow has been hired by UMKC as a consultant. He recently turned over to a newly formed search committee a list of coaches who would fit into UMKC's needs.

The key to being on that list is having a familiar name — former Kentucky coach, Joe B. Hall; former Nebraska coach, Moe Iba; former Kansas City Kings and K-State coach, Cotton Fitzsimmons; and a guy named Jack Hartman have been rumored to be on Bartow's list.

The job has to be attractive: a chance to build your own team in a metro area with a big budget — a $1.2 million budget to be exact. Some of that budget is coming from Kansas City businessmen who see success for UMKC on the basketball court as cash in their pockets.

However, the pressure to succeed and the money being pumped into the school might lead a very respectable University down the road of dishonesty like so many other programs.

Being in the NCAA doghouse certainly wouldn't be the type of national exposure Russell and the other planners at UMKC are seeking, and Russell claims UMKC won't be a school which thinks cheating is the fastest way to get ahead.

"We are not going to get out of line. Winning is darned important. That's why we'll hire a big-name coach and give him every tool," Russell said. "But we will do it by the rules. We don't want to be the University of Nevada at Las Vegas. This is my town. I've lived here 35 years. If this is good for the town, I want to do it. I don't want to do something that will hurt it."

UMKC is guaranteed one thing — a tough schedule. If the Kangaroos intend on facing area opponents, their schedule will be no easy one.

In two years, Kansas will have the talent to make another trip to the Final Four; Missouri is coming off a banner recruiting year and might be in the top 20; Wichita State will be in the process of rebuilding its program; and the prospects for K-State look very promising.

UMKC's step into the Division I is great for the Midwest and would be a nice addition to a K-State schedule.

But if UMKC can't succeed without going below the table, or if it chooses to go at it half-heartedly, it should do us all a favor and quit while it is ahead. All the NCAA needs is something else to investigate.

WASHINGTON — Despite opposition from both management and labor groups to laws requiring restrictions on workplace smoking, more and more businesses are adopting policies spelling out when and where employees can light up.

A survey of 662 employers nationwide released Monday showed that 36 percent of them have established policies on employee smoking and 2 percent said they planned to implement such restrictions before the end of this year.

Moreover, an additional 21 percent of the private companies and organizations surveyed by the Bureau of National Affairs and the American Society for Personnel Administration said they had smoking policies under consideration.

Report says Russia ahead of U.S. in space

LONDON — The Soviet Union has taken an "almost frightening" 10-year lead over the United States in its space program, Jane's Space Flight Directory says in its latest edition, published Tuesday.

Editor Reginald Turnill writes that the biggest surprise about the U.S. space shuttle disaster on Jan. 28 was that NASA had made no contingency plans for the space program in case of an accident.

He said that the National Aeronautics and Space Administration had a 100 percent flight safety record for 25 years and 'no transport system can hope to maintain such perfection in the face of human fallibility."

Turnill's assessments came in the introduction to the 1986 directory, published by the company that produces the authoritative Jane's reference works on aircraft, military vessels and weapons systems

"The Soviet lead in space is now almost frightening," wrote Turnhill, adding that because of the Challenger shuttle disaster, plans to use the shuttle as the West's main satellite launcher had failed beyond recovery.

In terms of space experience, the Soviets are so far ahead of the Americans "that they are almost out of sight," Turnill said.

Americans say it's still a man's workplace

NEW YORK — Should a woman do most of the housework when both she and her husband work? A majority of Americans say no, although the woman is often left with most of the housework anyway, according to a Media General-Associated Press

Women, who comprised one-third of the work force in 1958, today make up 44 percent of all workers. Their increasing numbers in the workplace was seen as a positive trend by nearly half the 1,473 adult Americans polled, while only one-quarter thought it was harmful.

The changing role of women in the workplace, however, has led to several inequities, according to the poll's respondents. For example:

A man was thought to have a better chance of winning promotion than a women of equal skill, according to 55 percent of the respondents. Only one-third thought men and women had equal chances of being promoted.

A man was thought to have a better chance of being hired than a woman, according to 44 percent of the respondents, while 37 percent thought men and women had equal opportunities.
 Ninety-three percent of the respondents said spouses should share household

Ninety-three percent of the respondents said spouses should share households cleaning equally when both work full-time outside the home. Yet in 57 percent of the households where both partners worked, women did most of the cleaning.

An equal percentage of men and women said it was good that more women were working outside the home, but women were far more likely than men to say that men held an advantage in hiring and promotions.

Beirut hostage's son puts message to music

LOS ANGELES — To remind Americans that terrorists in the Middle East are holding their countrymen hostage, a record featuring a song by the son of a kidnap victim is being sent to disc jockeys nationwide.

Eric Jacobsen said Monday he hopes "When the Word Comes," designed to draw attention to the plight of his father and other hostages in Lebanon, will get airplay. "Basically, it's to get a daily reminder out to the American people and to hopefully generate a supportive response from them," Jacobsen said in a telephone interview. "Our main concern is to have a message that people can relate to."

Jacobsen, who said he has performed non-professionally in the past, sings the song with help from studio musicians.

David Jacobsen, 55, administrator of the American University Hospital in Beirut, is believed to be held by the extremist group Islamic Jihad, or Islamic Holy War. Any profits from the record will go to the National Organization for Victims' Assistance, a fund set up for the hostages' families.

Helicopter crashes during TV traffic report

JACKSONVILLE, Fla. — A helicopter carrying a radio reporter and television cameraman crashed today during a live traffic report, killing two people and critically injuring a third.

The helicopter spun wildly and then exploded on impact near the downtown intersection of Interstates 95 and 10 at 6:44 a.m. EDT, said Barbara Kaufmann, program director at WTLV-TV. The ABC affiliate jointly leased the Hughes 500 helicopter with WAPE-FM radio.

Television transmissions from the chopper were cut off before impact. A skewing of the picture was the only hint to the audience that something had gone wrong, said Sharon Monroe, director of WTLV's "Good Morning Jacksonville" program.

Killed were reporter Julie King and pilot William Buddy Smith, 34, of Jacksonville. In critical condition at University Hospital was WTLV cameraman Brett C. Snyder, 22, said Sgt. Steven Richardson, of the Jacksonville Sheriff's Office.

Julie King was the broadcast name for Julie Ann Silvers, 26, said WAPE News

Manager Marjorie Phinizy.

Authorities were unsure what caused the crash. Kaufmann said it appeared there was a mechanical failure.

Royals knock off A's in 11-inning contest

By The Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. - Rudy Law doubled home the go-ahead run in the 11th inning to give the Kansas City Royals a 3-2 victory over the Oakland A's Monday night behind the combined six-hit pitching of rookie Scott Bankhead and two Willie Wilson walked to lead off the 11th against Jose Rijo, 2-5, who came in to start the inning. After Angel Salazar struck out, Wilson stole second and Law followed with his double. George Brett was intentionally walked and Jorge Orta drove in Law with an RBI single to give the Royals a 3-1 lead and their eventual winning run.

That run became a big one when the A's scored a run in the bottom of the 11th on a sacrifice fly by Jose Canseco.

Bud Black, 4-4, and Dan Quisenberry pitched the final two innings after Bankhead threw a four-hitter through nine innings, walking none and striking out seven. Quisenberry posted his sixth save.

Mike Davis tied the game 1-1 when he led off the Oakland fifth with his seventh homer, a high drive over the 375-foot sign in right-center that barely eluded the lunges of outfielders Mike Brewer and Law. He was the only runner Bankhead allowed past

Kansas City took a 1-0 lead in the third on Brett's RBI single off Oakland starter Rick Langford. Langford allowed only four hits in 6 1/3 innings.

NBA draft promises plenty of surprises

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - The Philadelphia 76ers insist they don't know what they will do with their No. 1 pick in today's National Basketball Association draft - not even if they will be doing the picking.

That decision, 76ers General Manager Pat Williams said, won't be made until the actual draft time itself - after Monday's midnight trading deadline.

"We're sitting tight," Williams said. "We haven't decided yet and we have to wait until we see what comes up. I don't think you get your best offers until the last minute."

The NBA imposed a trade embargo from midnight Monday until after the second round of the draft. which starts at 1 p.m. EDT today at Madison Square Garden's Felt Forum.

Williams said the 76ers have talked to every team in the league since they won the first pick in the draft lottery on May 11.

"We are getting a call about every hour," Williams said.

Trade speculation has centered on disgruntled 76ers center Moses Malone, but Williams said an agreement involving the three-time Most Valuable Player would not be easy to

"We'll trade Malone only if there is a great deal out there," Williams

The NBA champion Boston Celtics follow the 76ers in the draft, a fact that softens Philadelphia's excitement over selecting No. 1 in a draft that NBA scouting director Marty Blake calls "the best in a decade."

The consensus appears to indicate that 7-foot Brad Daugherty of North Carolina will go to the 76ers.

"Philadelphia would be a great opportunity and a lot of fun because they are a team with a winning tradition with a lot of great veterans," Daugherty said at a New York news conference. "They can teach me a

Daugherty said that the 76ers'

Julius Erving was his idol.

"Dr. J was the man who brought flare to the NBA," Daugherty said. "But I never wanted to play like him. I wanted to keep it simple, play getthe-job-done basketball.'

The Celtics, and every other team, are not saying who they want with their first-round pick, but are thought to be strongly considering 6-8 Len Bias of Maryland.

"Bias is the type of forward who can do the work in the trenches and also come out and hit the 20-footer," Celtics player personnel director and assistant coach Jimmy Rodgers said. "It's fair to say Bias has the potential to be a starter and an All-Star three years down the road."

Blake said most NBA teams want to draft forwards and centers if they have a high pick, making 6-11 Chris Washburn of North Carolina State and 7-0 William Bedford of Memphis State good prospects for the top halfdozen picks.

After Philadelphia and Boston, the first-round draft order is Golden State, Indiana, New York, Phoenix, Dallas, Cleveland, Chicago, San Antonio, Detroit, Washington, New Jersey, Portland, Utah, Denver, Sacramento, Denver, Atlanta, Houston, Philadelphia, Milwaukee, the Los Angeles Lakers and Portland.

Washburn and Bedford lead a group of underclassmen who could be drafted in the first round. Other top early eligibles are St. John's All-America Walter Berry, Cedric Henderson of Georgia (who played in Italy last season), Dwayne Washington of Syracuse and John Williams of Louisiana State.

Top seniors besides Daugherty and Bias include Kenny Walker of Kentucky, Chuck Person of Auburn, Del Curry of Virginia Tech, Ron Harper of Miami, Ohio, Maurice Martin of St. Joseph's, Anthony Jones of Nevada-Las Vegas, Johnny Dawkins and Mark Alarie of Duke and Brad Sellers of Ohio State.

Crowding worsens

Prison population increases

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The number of inmates in state and federal prisons topped the half-million mark last year as tougher sentencing packed already-overcrowded facilities, the government said

As of Dec. 31, the state and federal prison population stood at an all-time high of 503,601, with the addition of 39,000 new prisoners in 1985, according to new data gathered by the Bureau of Justice Statistics. The bureau, an arm of the Justice Department, estimated that by year-end 1985, the state prisons were operating from 6 percent to 21 percent above capacity, depending on definitions used to determine overcrowding. The federal system, which has a capacity, said bureau's report Nineteen states in 1985 granted total of 40,200 prisoners, operated from 23 percent to 54 percent above early releases to 18,600 inmates because their corrections facilities were filled beyond capacity, the latest study said. It said that another 10,100 prisoners were backed up in local jails because 19 state prison systems didn't have room for them.

Overall prison population grew 8.4 percent last year, and population is up nearly 68 percent since 1977, when it was 300,024. Last year's addition of 39,000 new prisoners was the third-highest increase since prisoner statistics were first collected in 1926.

Twenty-nine states reported jail backups or early releases in 1985 because of overcrowding, with nine of them using both measures to ease the situation. Four states -Louisiana, Kentucky, Mississippi and New Jersey - resorted to holding in local jails more than 10 percent of their state prisoners with sentences of more than one

From 1983 to 1985, state and federal prisons in the United States were expanded to accommodate an additional 45,000 inmates, but during the same period, prison populations grew by nearly 68,000.

States have added about 165,000 prison beds since 1978, thereby increasing capacity almost twothirds in seven years, Steven R. Schlesinger, director of the Bureau of Justice Statistics, said in a state-

"The numbers are staggering and they will continue to be staggering and criminal justice policy will continue to have less tolerance for the offender," predicted Anthony P. Travisono, executive director of the American Correctional Association, a professional group of 20,000 members who work in the corrections field.

'We're in a conservative mode and the public has been basically fed up with ... crime rates, Travisono said in an interview. "The liberalism of the '70s has just disappeared in these long sentences that are being imposed."

Amendment to tax bill inspires senator's rally

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Backers of a radical tax-overhaul plan tried to rally votes Monday against a lastminute amendment that Finance Committee Chairman Bob Packwood argued would "open up the biggest personal tax-shelter loophole in the tax code" - real estate investments.

"This is absolutely going to open up this bill to some of the richest people in America and again allow them to pay no tax," Packwood, R-Ore., told colleagues. He said he was unsure he could muster enough votes to defeat the amendment, which could delay passage of the overall bill beyond the Tuesday night schedule he had anticipated.

Packwood, manager of the bill, led the attack on a proposal by Sen. Howard Metzenbaum, D-Ohio, to remove the retroactive feature of a section aimed at closing off real estate tax shelters.

Metzenbaum, in a theme repeated by more than a dozen senators during debate, said the retroactive provision - which affects the ability to use investment losses to shield other earnings from taxes - amounts to a rules change after an investment has been made.

Metzenbaum said the amendment is designed to help real-estate professionals, "not dentists, druggists, doctors and others who go into real estate as a means to shelter other in-

But Packwood said, "This would allow those with immense wealth...to escape paying any taxation. I do not know where the votes are on such an amendment, but there will be a vote.'

For the time being, the Senate was looking over some of the scores of written into the measure by the Finance Committee. And some members were looking for ways to add some more special provisions.

"I could think of one deserving one," Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., told reporters without identifying what provision he had in mind. He said he expects "a few little transition rules," as the tax breaks are called, to be tacked on before the measure is passed.

But some of those already in the bill "could stand a little ventilation." Dole said. That is exactly what Metzenbaum had in mind. He has put a list of more than a dozen of the provisions that he considers least justifiable and was preparing amendments to eliminate some of

Among the worst ones in Metzenbaum's view: Nearly $5 million for the Denver and Rio Grande Railroad, which lost some track to a mudslide in 1983; about $100 million in tax cuts to help the Phillips Petroleum Co. over the hump caused in fighting a takeover attempt; and indefinite authority to Bonneville Power to issue federally guaranteed tax-exempt bonds, even though similar bonds guaranteed by the federal government do not qualify for tax exemption.

On a 74-13 vote, the Senate rejected Metzenbaum's amendment to eliminate the benefit for Phillips Petroleum and use the money to give a tax benefit for farmers. "Vote with Phillips or vote with the family farmer," Metzenbaum said.

Sen. David Boren, D-Okla., defended the break as something for "real people with real problems" at the company, which has headquarters at Bartlesville, Okla

GM studies plans to close six assembly plants

By The Associated Press

DETROIT - General Motors Corp. executives are studying whether to close as many as six of the company's 25 North American car assembly plants by 1990, a trade journal reported Monday

"At the very least, GM is expected to close two car assembly plants in the United States over the next few years," the weekly Metalworking News edition of American Metal Market said, quoting unidentified company sources.

GM spokesman Donald Postma, asked about the report, said, "We don't comment on speculative stories of that nature.

At the top of the list for closing, the journal said, are older plants in Detroit; Norwood, Ohio; Lakewood, Ga.; North Tarrytown, N.Y.; and Ste. Therese, Quebec.

The newspaper also listed the Fairfax plant in Kansas City, Kan., but a new GM car assembly plant is under construction there and the closing of the older one has long been expected once the new one is finished.

One or two of GM's eight U.S. and Canadian light truck assembly plants also could be threatened, the trade journal said.

The U.S. auto industry is expected to have the capacity to produce 20 percent more cars than the public demands by 1990, the journal said.

The biggest growth will come from eight assembly plants either operating or being planned by Japanese companies, which will be able to produce 1.5 million cars a

Because they are new, the Japanese plants will have lower operating costs, including younger workforces and lower pension costs. The Japanese also plan to significantly increase the amount of cars they build in Canada for shipment to the United States.

The journal cited recent GM internal projects, including one called the Corporate Vehicle Segmentation Study, which say GM has grown less bullish about consumer acceptance of its next generation of compact and midsize cars and has no idea how long the market will hold up for its older, rear-drive big cars and station wagons such as the Chevrolet GM builds more than 57 percent of the cars produced in the United States and Canada.

FTC charges company with misrepresentation

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Federal Trade Commission charged Monday that the R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Co. misrepresented the purpose and results of a government study of smoking and health.

The advertising entitled "Of Cigarettes and Science," appeared in major newspapers and magazines last year, the commission said. The ads contended that government studies indicated smoking is not as hazardous as the public has been told and challenged the relationship between smoking and heart disease.

That misrepresented the study, done for the National Institutes of Health, the commission said.

In addition, the FTC said Reynolds "failed to disclose in the ad that men in the study who guit smoking had a significantly lower rate of death from heart disease than men who continued to smoke.

In addition, the advertising did not state that the study's results are consistent with previous studies showing that those who quit smoking have a substantial decrease in death from heart disease, the FTC said.

Failure to make those disclosures constituted a misrepresentation, the commission said.

The complaint lodged by the FTC begins a hearing process under which an administrative law judge will review the case and issue a decision. If the charges are upheld, Reynolds could be required to run ads stating the information not included in the earlier campaign.

Reynolds spokesman David Fishel responded that the company believes "the message in question was a fair and accurate commentary."

He said the ad provided the tobacco company's opinion on one aspect of a significant public controversy.

"The key issue at stake in this proceeding...is the right of a company to comment on important public matters and we believe this proceeding by the FTC poses a serious threat to the freedom of speech of companies and individuals alike," Fishel said.

The commission voted 4-1 to launch the complaint, with Chairman Daniel Oliver dissenting.

"I believe that, as a matter or public policy, it is valuable for the public to hear all sides of an issue, and I am concerned about taking any action that may inhibit free expression of views that might not be popular to government regulators, said Oliver.

R.J. Reynolds, based in Winston-Salem, N.C., sells 20 brands of cigarettes, the FTC said.

Those wanting to park on campus still need to purchase parking permits; however, through Aug. 1, students, faculty and staff don't have to park in their designated areas. All other traffic rules and regulations are still in effect, Lot R114, the gravel lot east Jackson said.

Hospitality seminar tours 'real world'

By JULIE FOUNTAIN Collegian Reporter

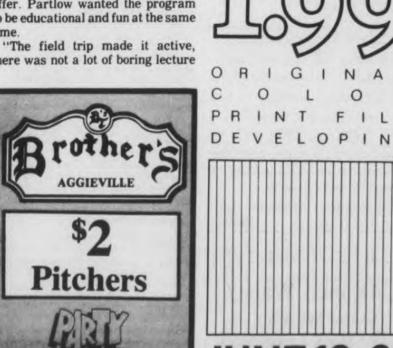

A flaming dessert, a tour of the Manhattan Holidome and a tour of Kansas City's finest dining and hotel establishments were only a few of the items on the agenda of the Hospitality Management seminar for high school students Friday and Saturday

The program, designed by Charlie Partlow, director of the Restaurant Management program in the Department of Dietetic, Restaurant and Institutional Management, was used as a recruitment tool by the department to reach two basic goals. "The ultimate goal was recruitment for both the University and the Restaurant Management program. We also were interested with informing high school students of career opportunities in hospitality fields," Partlow said.

Partlow was asked by his department head to prepare a program for high school students to inform them of the department and what it has to offer. Partlow wanted the program to be educational and fun at the same agency and fast food restaurant. After the demonstrations and tours, the students were encouraged to ask questions. Partlow said he was surprised to hear such informed questions from high school students. After spending the night at Goodnow Hall and eating breakfast at Kramer Food Center, the nine participants headed for Kansas City to tour such restaurants and hotels as Fedora's Cafe & Bar, Fred P. Ott's, Bristol Bar & Grill, and the Hyatt Regency Hotel. The group had lunch at Houlihan's Old Place before retur-

Reagan announces Burger resignation, suggests successor

By The Associated Press

Kansas State University

WASHINGTON - President Reagan on Tuesday announced the retirement of Warren E. Burger as chief justice of the United States and said he will nominate Justice William Rehnquist to succeed him and become the 16th man to head the Supreme Court.

Upon Rehnquist's confirmation by the Senate, Reagan said, he will nominate federal appeals court Judge Antonin Scalia to the Supreme Court, thus preserving a conservative majority on the high court.

Burger is 78, Rehnquist 61 and

If confirmed, Scalia would be the first American of Italian descent to serve on the court. He also would be the youngest member of the present court, which in November would have become, without Burger's retirement, the oldest Supreme Court in history.

With five of its members over 77, the court's average age today is 74. With Burger's departure and Scalia's arrival, the court's average age would be 71.

Scalia's presence is not expected to alter the court's ideological balance, but his youth and his recognized intellect could give the court a powerful conservative voice for decades to

If anything, Scalia is regarded as even more conservative than Burger, who is regarded as second only to Rehnquist in his politically conservative views. On the issue of abortion, Burger's retirement will not change the court's position favoring a woman's right to end her pregnancy.

Burger was one of four court members who last week voiced reservations about the court's landmark 1973 decision legalizing abortion. His departure still leaves five solid votes behind that 1973 ruling.

Scalia is a Roman Catholic and the father of nine children. A White House official who participated in the review of candidates for the post said that, although he was familiar with a number of Scalia's decisions, he did not know whether he ever participated in an abortion case.

Burger's retirement could produce one significant change in life at the Supreme Court — television cameras and other electronic coverage might be allowed. Burger is vehemently opposed to such coverage.

Rehnquist refused to say Tuesday whether he would like to change that, but electronic news coverage of the judicial process has spread through many state and local courts in recent

Burger's letter of resignation makes his retirement effective July 10, which is expected to fall a short time after the court ends its current

Sen. Strom Thurmond, R-S.C., whose Senate Judiciary Committee has jurisdiction over the appointments, promised to hold hearings "right away" and predicted both Rehnquist and Scalia would be confirmed.

Summer program aims to teach skills

Danelle Haldeman, 6, Manhattan, follows the movement in the mirror of her teacher, Judy Quirk, instructor of dance, during the dance program of "Summer Adventure '86" Tuesday afternoon in Ahearn 304.

By DAVID HAWLEY Collegian Reporter

With the beginning of summer vacation, many elementary-age children in Manhattan are left with little to do during the summer months. But a program called "Summer Adventure '86" can change this situation for some of them.

"Summer Adventure '86" is an outgrowth of the Sports Fitness School that has been held at K-State for the past 10 years. Previously separate entities, the Sports Fitness School and the Enrichment Program were combined to form an all-day affair in which children learn a number of skills.

"The activities are designed to teach children things that they wouldn't ordinarily be exposed to in a public school situation," said Enell Foerster, co-cordinator of the program. The instruction is divided into two areas - activities and enrichment.

The two programs are alternated throughout the day, said Bill Butler, administrator of community education for continuing education. Butler said alternating the programs helps keep the children's interest all day.

The activity programs include swimming lessons, golf, Frisbee, soccer, volleyball, hockey, softball, track and field, aerobics, square dance and gymnastics. A variety of fitness tests designed to monitor each child's performance is performed.

When asked what she had learned, 11-year-old Amy Chang said, "I learned that I don't like aerobics." Josh Hutter, 11, said his favorite activity was judo. "I learned two flips and three pins," he said.

The instructors for activity programs are either recent graduates or seniors in physical education. Co-cordinator Joselle Edwards, instructor of physical education, dance and leisure studies, said that for many of the instructors, it allows them to be in the school setting while having their first job.

The enrichment portion of the instruction is designed to expose the child to a variety of cultural programs and is held in classrooms on

"The instructors for the enrichment part are very qualified," Foerster said. "We have a number of public school teachers and our dance intructor has even directed children's theater." Enrichment areas covered are arts and crafts, drama, science,

Dole supports Reagan on justice nominations By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Senate Majority Leader Bob Dole, R-Kan., on Tuesday praised President Reagan's nomination of Justice William Rehnquist as chief justice of the United States and predicted he would easily be confirmed.

Dole, in a statement, also endorsed the president's selection of federal appeals court Judge Antonin Scalia to fill a vacancy on the Supreme Court once Rehnquist was confirm-

The Kansas lawmaker issued the statement after the president announced the retirement of Warren E. Burger as the head of the high court. Dole said Burger's "wise, consistent leadership and voice of reason will be missed.

"But I can think of no finer choice for his replacement than Justice Rehnquist," Dole said. "During his tenure on the Supreme Court, he has helped to define the court's proper role in the federal government."

Scalia, who was named by Reagan to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Washington in 1982, has "impeccable credentials" and should have no problem winning Senate confirmation, Dole said.

Shuttle discussion continues

Base closing may be next

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Sen. James Sasser said today the military space shuttle facility at Vandenberg Air Force Base in California should be permanently shut down because of "serious technological flaws."

Halting the military shuttle program "may eliminate the need for a fourth shuttle orbiter," the Tennessee Democrat said in a floor speech to his colleagues.

The administration is now considering whether to recommend construction of a fourth shuttle in the wake of January's explosion of the Challenger. In the wake of that accident, the remaining three shuttles have been grounded.

Sasser, ranking Democrat on the Appropriations Committee's military construction subcommittee, said he has investigated the situation at Vandenberg, where the Air Force has been constructing launch facilities for military shuttle

"We have spent nearly $3 billion temperatures."

on a facility that will not work and may not even be needed," said

Maj. Ron Rand, a spokesman for the Air Force, said the service had just seen Sasser's report and did not have any comment yet.

But Rand noted that the service is reviewing its space program in the wake of the Challenger disaster and the April explosion of an unmanned Titan 34-D missile at Vandenberg shortly after it was launched.

The initial Vandenberg launch had been scheduled for next month, but all shuttle flights have been delyed until at least next summer and if the shuttle launches begin again at that date, Vandenberg launches could start in the spring of 1988, Rand said.

Sasser cited several problems at Vandenberg but said the main flaw was the "poor design of the main engine hydrogen gas escape

Another problem is the weather, Sasser said. "Vandenberg has problems with fog, high winds and cool

Official regrets approval

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The Morton Thiokol official who overruled company engineers and approved the launch of space shuttle Challenger said Monday the decision was a wrong one based on what he felt was inconclusive data about the effect of cold temperature on booster rocket joints.

"In hindsight, we wish we could reverse the decision we made," Joseph Kilminster, a company vice president, said. "It has been on my mind since Jan. 28 (when the shuttle exploded)."

Kilminster and five other Morton Thiokol officials and engineers testified before the House Committee on Science and Technology, which is investigating the accident. All testified under oath.

Engineers Alan McDonald and Roger Boisjoly told the committee of their objections to the launch when they learned the night before that temperatures at the Kennedy Space Center would be below freezing for several hours.

The Rogers commission concluded last week that the disaster. which killed seven astronauts, was caused by a failure in a rocket joint and listed cold weather as a contributing cause.

"Our concerns temperature," Boisjoly said. "Our primary concerns were rooted in a shuttle launch in January the year before. It was launched in 53 degrees, the coldest yet, and there was erosion of the primary O-ring and a blowby of hot gases in one of the booster joints."

He said the resiliency of the seals had not been tested below 50 degrees. Challenger was launched with the temperature at 36 degrees.

McDonald, who was at the Kennedy Space Center at the time, said he relayed his concerns during a teleconference to Morton Thiokol officials at the company plant in Brigham City, Utah.

Kilminster said the concerns about launch were transmitted to NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center, Huntsville, Ala., which manages the booster contract.

IRS holds refunds to collect on loans

From Staff and Wire Reports

The Internal Revenue Service withheld tax refunds from more than 7,700 Kansas and Missouri residents this year because of defaults on federally guaranteed student loans, officials said.

This is the first year the IRS has been authorized by Congress to withhold tax refunds to collect on student loans in default.

Figures released by the Department of Education indicated that the IRS held back 5,521 Missouri tax refunds worth $2.9 million. In Kansas, 2,200 refunds worth $1.4 million were withheld.

K-State reported 476 loans to the federal government this year, said Doug Ackley, head of the cashiers and loans section of the controller's office. The principle on the reported delinquent loans is $610,631.

City commission studies Seth Child's Road traffic

By SHELLY WAKEMAN Staff Writer

Motorists given traffic tickets for passing on the right-hand side of Seth Child's Road may be in luck.

William Frost, city attorney, said that after speaking with the prosecutor handling the charges, violations may be dismissed.

During Tuesday night's city commission meeting, Commissioner Gene Klingler began the process to possibly alleviate the "frustrating problem" of rushhour congestion on the road.

The commission members then approved the first reading of an amendment to the existing ordinance prohibiting such maneuvers.

Commissioners also considered approval of an ordinance to rezone a Single-Family Residential District to a Four-Family Residential District. The tract of land is located between University Drive and College Avenue, behind University Terrace Apart-

The Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board and city engineering staff did not recommend the rezoning because a valid protest petition has been filed by neighboring property

Among residents voicing opposition was John Strickler, 1523 University Drive. Strickler said he represented concerned residents in the immediate area of the proposed rezoning.

He said that since the proposal would allow the developer to build four-unit dwellings on the land, several objections were valid. Strickler said the structures would change the character of the quiet residential atmosphere because of the "type of people that would be likely to rent there."

Commissioner Suzanne Lindamood said her main objection to the proposal was the inevitable increase in water drainage problems already found in the area. Commissioners voted unanimously to send the proposal back to the board to conduct a study concerning the drainage issue.

Concordia columnist marks 65th year

By The Associated Press

CONCORDIA - She blazed a trail through an occupation dominated by men 60 years ago, has traveled the globe, lives in a landmark Concordia home and maintains a composure that defies her 87 years.

And Marion Ellet, one of Kansas' most senior editorial voices, isn't anywhere near ready to throw in the towel.

Her daily columns for two Kansas newspapers are written from a perspective that spans most of the 20th century but remain at the cutting edge of national and international politics.

"As long as I can write, I don't mind getting old," said Ellet, a veteran of the 1920s newspaper wars in New York City, whose awardwinning column appears in The Concordia Blade-Empire and The Great Bend Tribune.

The column, titled "Mugwump Musings," frequently offers blunt assessments of world issues and events. But Ellet has dished out those helpings of stark frankness for a long

Her biggest point of pride lately is a first-place award for editorial commentary she earned this year in the Kansas Press Association's Awards of Excellence Contest. A judge for the statewide competition wrote that her columns are "incisive, almost breathtakingly simple and to the point."

However, her generally conservative writings have irritated a good many politicians over the years.

She recalled working for The Topeka State Journal in the 1930s and repeatedly ripping Henry J. Allen, a former Republican governor and U.S. senator, in her column for allowing the Women's Christian Temperance Union to finance his political campaigns.

The problem was that Allen, also a prominent Kansas newspaperman, bought a one-third interest in the State Journal and was named editor on Jan. 1, 1936. Allen's first order, before even settling into his new office, was to fire Ellet

After a rigorous educational program at Barstow Prep School in Kansas City and receiving a bachelor's degree in English from Smith College, in Massachusetts, she went to work as a reporter for the Blade-Empire in 1921

The next year she left Kansas with $500 in her pocket, determined to land a job on one of the highly competitive New York newspapers. It was a time when journalism was viewed as almost an exclusively male occupation.

But she got her break when she was hired as a reporter for the Brooklyn Eagle.

Back in those days, New York reporters were told to hit the street the first time even the slightest mistake cropped up in any of their stories, Ellet said. And the same quick firing policy applied if a reporter couldn't produce, regardless of the reason, an article that an editor had assigned.

Although she covered a number of stories involving local Irish politicians, she was frequently assigned to write society articles, Ellet said.

"It wouldn't have done me any good to stick with it," she said. "I knew I would have been 40 or 50 years old before I could write a column or do any serious political Ellet returned to Concordia to work for the Blade-Empire in 1926 and, two years later, she covered one of her favorite presidential candidates, Democrat Al Smith, as he toured Kansas by train. She went to work in the early 1930s for the Kansas City Journal-Post.

She wrote her Journal-Post columns from the Capitol in Topeka while the Kansas Legislature was in session but worked out of her Concordia home the remainder of the time. Ellet quit writing for the Kansas City newspaper after management changes resulted in a new editorial

After her stint on The Topeka State Journal, her column was syndicated in a number of small Kansas and M. souri newspapers. But at the outset of World War II, she returned to the Blade-Empire, where she used the telephone as her primary reporting tool for writing all types of news stories until she retired in 1964.

Since then, she has been using the knowledge acquired during 65 years of journalism experience to write her daily column.

Music from Roaring '20s era

Dinner theater hosts musical

The show must go on. Held over for the fifth week, Opening Night, a Manhattan-based dinner theater group, will perform "Ain't We Got Fun," a Roaring '20s musical revue, again this weekend at Gregov's Dinner Theatre, 2605 Stagg Hill Road.

The show opened in mid-May, and sold-out performances have kept the show running since then. This weekend's performances - the dinner starts Friday and Saturday at 6 p.m. followed by the show at 8 p.m. - will end the five-week run.

"We (Gregov's) had to turn away quite a few people," Linda Haynes-Uthoff, director of Opening Night, said of deciding to hold the show

The group has put together two shows of song and dance numbers combined with comedy sketches as part of their dinner theater performances. The first show, "The Music of Broadway - An Evening with ner and Loewe," opened at also ran five weeks.

"Ain't We Got Fun" includes a cast of University graduate students, local business professionals and a junior at Manhattan High School -Daphne Richards. Haynes-Uthoff calls it a "real diverse group."

Performers are David Atchison, Cherie Geiser, Jo Richards and Haynes-Uthoff, all of Manhattan; and Glenn Guhr and Eugene Thomas, graduates in music. Connaitre Miller, graduate in music, is the pianist for the 11/2-hour show.

Opening Night attributes its success to a show packed full of "music, some comedy sketches, tap dancing and blues," Haynes-Uthoff said.

By the time dinner theater guests realized there was a market in the area for a local show of this nature. Haynes-Uthoff said at that point the group struck an interest in increasing their repertoire and seeking more local talent.

"It's an open group," she said. "We're always looking for new people who are interested in singing and acting." Haynes-Uthoff said auditions will soon be held for replacements for some spots in the '20s and Broadway shows, as well as other positions for new fall shows.

Haynes-Uthoff said the group is slowly adding equipment to make touring more feasible. They plan to travel throughout a 200-mile area this summer to perform their shows.

Opening Night is in the process of working out a contract with the Manhattan Holidome for weekly Sunday performances throughout the Singing group performs in Canada the Plaza of Nations where they performed their other two shows.

"The stage at the Plaza of Nations was comparable to McCain's (Auditorium) stage but not quite as deep," Bowles said. "We were close to the Canadian Pavillion where most of the people gathered. We had about 750 to 1,000 people watching us at a time.

"We got a really good response from the people. They seemed to really enjoy our music.

Bowles said there were approximately 350,000 people at the Fair on the day the group performed and on the weekends the numbers jumped above 1 million.

This year's fair theme was "Man in Motion, Man in Communication." and the students viewed many exhibits from different countries.

'One of my favorites was the Swiss exhibition. It was a huge Swatch watch about 100 yards high made of plastic strapped on metal, and it was running," Bowles said.

He said the most relaxing exhibition was from Washington state which was an escalator that carried spectators past huge movie screens displaying various pictures of the

After their day of performance, the group spent the rest of the time sightseeing on Victoria Island and the Buchart Gardens. The students also got their fill of the exciting night life of Vancouver.

Commission to consider drilling amendment

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA — Chairman Michael Lennen predicted Tuesday the Kansas Corporation Commission will decide quickly whether to amend a previous order allowing infill drilling in the giant Hugoton gas field of southwest Kansas.

The commission decided in a one and one-half day limited hearing to listen to proponents and opponents of the recommended increased drilling modifications in the KCC's order of April 24. The modifications allow gas production companies to begin drilling more wells in the Hugoton field next January.

That order allows a second well on four-year period, Lennen said. That each 640-acre section in the field, dictates where the new well can be drilled and sets limits on the amount of gas which can be produced from the new wells and the combined production from the two wells on each section. There are more than 4,000 wells presently in the field.

Lennen gave the parties until Friday to submit position statements. He said the commission will consider changes in its order at its regular weekly administrative meeting June 25. He said he expects a decision "pretty quick."

The commission is satisfied with its basic order allowing the start of infill drilling and phasing it in over a order changes a well-spacing program for the field which has been in effect 42 years.

He said the commission will consider suggestions that the order be modified as to formula for setting production limits on the wells during the phase-in period and whether to allow greater flexibility on where new wells can be located on each section. He also said it will address a question raised by opponents of infill drilling over whether the KCC had the authority to issue its order.

Production companies, led by Cities Service Oil and Gas Co., Tulsa, Okla., which made the original application, claim maximum recovery of natural gas cannot be achieved in the Hugoton field unless additional wells are drilled to tap pockets of gas which the existing wells do not reach.

Opponents, led by KPL Gas Service, and including other distribution pipeline companies, say the production companies have not proved their case that a significant amount of additional gas can be drained from the field by infill drilling.

They also say the real motive of the production companies is to raise the price of the gas to make more money. That increased cost, they say, will be passed on to consumers.

The commission declined to listen again to arguments about the wisdom of allowing infill drilling, but limited the rehearing to technicalities of how it should be implemented.

Final witness at the hearing, which had been scheduled to last five days, was Ronald L. Cook, a Kansas City petroleum engineer hired by the commission staff as a consultant on the feasibility of permitting infill drilling in the Hugoton field and how best to implement it.

In response to a question by Gregory Stucky, attorney for the Southwest Kansas Royalty Owners Association, Cook said he believes there is sufficient incentive built into the commission's order to get production companies to drill the new wells

"I still feel there is a need for restricting the (production) allowable of the infill wells during the phase-in period," Cook said. "I think the incentive is there...if the operator knows that after the four-year plasein they go back (to higher allowables)."

Questioned also by John
Rosenberg, the attorney for KPL
Gas Service, Cook said he thinks most of the infill wells will be drilled within the four-year phase-in period.

"I think the operators, generally, will make every effort to complete their wells within the phasein," he

South African violence eases

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa

— The government reported Tuesday that 11 more blacks had been killed but claimed its security vise on the nation had frustrated plans for a massive campaign of violence.

Deaths during a strike by millions of blacks on Monday's anniversary of the bloody 1976 Soweto uprising, and through the early hours Tuesday, brought to 42 the number of people killed since the state of emergency was imposed last Thursday.

The average of eight daily compares with 2.4 last year and five this year before the emergency.

Authorities maintained that the security clampdown foiled mass protests and averted what they called plans by the outlawed African National Congress to change the country's history with a "multi-pronged offensive" on the anniversary.

"Nowhere was there mass unrest." government spokesman Leon Mellet told reporters at the daily briefing by the Information Bureau, the only source of official information under stringent curbs on the press.

"The incidents of violence were isolated," he said.

Blacks in Soweto stared impassively at 20 reporters, local and foreign, who were taken in meshprotected police buses on a conducted tour of several neighborhoods in the vast township outside Johan-

Reporters saw no signs of unrest. The buses did not stop, and the journalists were not allowed to speak with residents.

The trouble in Soweto 10 years ago began June 16 with demonstrations by school children against a new law requiring them to be taught in Afrikaans, the language of the white Afrikaners who control the government. Riots spread through the nation and 575 people had been killed, by official count, when it subsided late in 1977

Anglican envoy Terry Waite arrived to investigate the plight of clerics among an estimated 2,000 people jailed without charge under sweeping emergency police powers.

Waite, representing Archbishop of Canterbury Robert Runcie, toured Soweto with black Anglican Bishop Desmond Tutu. Emergency regulations prohibited reporters from accompanying them.

Detainees may not be identified publicly under the emergency regulations, but the white opposition Progressive Federal Party began naming people in Parliament, one of the few areas left for unfettered public debate.

Local poll traces teaching demand

By The Collegian Staff

Job opportunities for elementary and secondary school teachers graduating in 1986 continue to expand across the nation, according to a recent publication by Jim Akin of the Career Planning and Placement Center.

The report, compiled annually by Akin, traces the supply and demand of graduating teachers and is based on a survey of teacher placement officers at universities across the nation.

Akin said the picture is bright for the state's education graduates. "I think the outlook for K-State graduates and for those of other state schools is quite strong. Almost all graduates who want to teach will be in classrooms this fall," he said.

The teaching fields of mathematics, physics, chemistry, bilingual education, multiple handicapped, and mental retardation are reported nationally to have the greatest demand of the 40 subjects and fields surveyed. The greatest increase nationally in teacher demand has been at the elementary

However, at K-State, special education teachers are in the greatest demand, Akin said.

"It has been overwhelmingly difficult for our placement office to find enough candidates to fill special education teaching vacancies," he said.

Akin's report indicated that while opportunities for teachers continue to expand nationally, placement officers in the Northwest and Midwest/Great Plains are less optimistic.

"The increase in demand locally is coming at a slower rate. Many of our teachers, particularly at the elementary level, are considering relocating to the Sunbelt, where opportunities for teachers are increasing more rapidly," he said.

Help from IRS raises scepticism

The Internal Revenue Service wants to give us a break.

Some of us could be saved the hassle of filing tax returns next year.

It hasn't happened yet, but the idea seems to be gaining momentum in both the House and Senate. In short, the IRS would collect income information from your employer, fill out your form and send you either a check or a bill.

That's it. If you qualified to fill out a 1040EZ last year, read on. The IRS wants to save you some time. Of course, if any errors were taxpayer would be responsible for notifying the IRS, and could be liable if the mistake is not discovered until later, said Donald Korb, an IRS official.

Individuals who cannot afford to hire a tax consultant run the risk of being manipulated by not being aware of what a mistake might look like.

More than 16.7 million taxpayers could be saved the pain of filling out a 1040EZ if this proposal becomes reality. More than that if the proposed cuts in the new tax bill pass. It also computes a loss of made by the IRS, the individual more than $3.6 million to the U.S. Postal Service - 16.7 million fewer 22 cent stamps bought.

> While nobody really enjoys filling out an income tax form, if told you didn't have to, maybe you'd find a reason why you should.

Scepticism about giving the IRS free reign over the filing of returns may keep the return-free system from becoming an option.

Sometimes you just have to wonder why people want to be so

Reagan ignores Afghan resistance

With the Monday meeting between President Reagan and representatives of Afghan rebels, the opportunity to formally recognize the resistance movement was refused.

Similar to the South African situation, the administration is embracing the cause, but falling far short of even using its full diplomatic rhetorical powers toward the resolution of conflicts.

Reagan refused to answer questions from the media, "because we have only a very brief time for our meeting."

Understandably, the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan, and actions by the administration must be weighed seriously to prevent further chasms between the superpowers.

But, considering the current relationship between Moscow and Washington, one could wonder what would hurt by the Reagan formal administration's diplomatic recognition of the resistance movement.

Very little has been accomplished with boycotts and rhetoric concerning the situation. Administration spokesman Larry Speakes reportedly said Reagan realizes that the formal recognition issue is important, but would be "premature to resolve now."

But the initial invasion of 5,000 Soviet troops occurred on Christmas Day, 1979. And by June the following year, Soviet troops numbered 85,000. It would seem that the time for any reaction particularly verbal in nature - to be "premature" has long passed.

Baby' signs belong on dashboard

The time nas come to do something about a terrible problem we all face. Car and Driver, the auto enthusiast magazine, has taken the first steps, and it is left to us to carry the standard into battle.

It's those repulsive, sanctimonious, pompous "BABY ON BOARD" signs that are springing up in the rear windows of granolamobiles. The same mentality that urges "Split wood, not atoms" and "Save the forests" simultaneously, now wants everyone on the road to pay particular attention to their vehicles, because they're transporting the genetic equivalent of Eins-

These little yellow signs really burn me up. What sort of idiocy leads one to think a driver is any more likely to hit a car carrying a infant than any other? And why, in heaven's name, should I be more careful around their progeny than around someone else's?

I love children...the record bears that out; in fact, a column I wrote about my best

Columnist friend's child won an award. So, you see, I am not anti-baby. But the presumption that my driving needs particular attention when passing some longhair in a '74 Volkswagen rocker panels is violently offensive. Many of the readers of Car and Driver were outraged when Brock Yates suggested that he was tempted to rear-end any vehicles he saw boasting their progeny were passengers. Frankly, although I wouldn't ram those cars, I might be tempted to cast

Microbus or a '69 Volvo with cancer of the aspersions on the parentage of the parents...which would defeat the purpose of the signs, wouldn't it?

"BABY ON BOARD" signs, one C/D reader suggested, were the outgrowth of a tragic accident in which a baby froze to death when its parents were too badly hurt to inform rescuers the child was there. The rescuers missed the baby.

The premise is fine, but the execution stinks: - In the first place, the signs block rear vision (Massachusets has just outlawed the signs for that reason).

- Secondly, valuable time will be wasted if there is, in fact, no child in the car but the sign has not been removed.

- Third, the sign belongs on the dash, to remind the driver, not the other guy, of his awesome responsibility.

However, something tells me the rescue story is a convenience, and probably not the cause of the signs.

Founded in belief

Collegian columnist Tim Fitzgerald stated in a June 9 editorial that "the United States is not a nation based on the belief in a God." That would seem to me to be something that history would prove to be true or false. What do the founding fathers and the foundational documents of the United States have to say on the subject?

The Declaration of Independence of 1776 states that all people "are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights." George Washington addressed both houses of Congress in 1789 with the words, "No people can be bound to acknowledge and adore the Invisible Hand which conducts the affairs of men more than the people of the United States...We ought to be no less persuaded that the propitious smiles of Heaven can never be expected on a nation that disregards the eternal rules of order and right which Heaven itself has ordained."

John Adams said in 1798, "Our Constitution was made only for a moral and religious people. It is wholly inadequate for the government of any other."

Abraham Lincoln's famous Gettysburg Address included the phrase, "That this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth." In 1863 Lincoln wrote, 'Whereas, the Senate of the United States devoutly recognizing the Supreme Authority and just Government of Almighty God in all the affairs of men and of nations, has, by a resolution, requested the President to designate and set apart a day for national prayer and humiliation."

Whether you agree with their ideas or not, history testifies that the United States was indeed founded on the belief in a God.

Miss Liberty model winging to New York

PARIS - She was tempest-tossed by rain and hail, and a hot sun threatened to melt her into a huddled mass, but a 5,500-pound chocolate model of the Statue of Liberty finally set out intact Tuesday for the New World.

The mammoth confection, which stands 13 feet high, is the work of Paul Berthon, a master pastry and chocolate chef. He and two assistants spent three 100-hour weeks fashioning the bitter-dark Miss Liberty, but the Paris weather made the "bon voyage" part the most difficult.

Berthon, 43, crafted the model at a 19th century factory in an obscure back street of eastern Paris, a similar site to the one in which Auguste Bertholdi forged the Miss Liberty flies to New York on Wednesday in the cool hold of an Air France jumbo jet for display in the Meridien Hotel. The statue itself is 8 feet 2 inches tall, standing on a 4-foot-2-inch copy of the massive stone base in New York Harbor.

Berthon left his job as head pastry chef to Paris' prestigious Fauchon speciality store to create his Miss Liberty. His masterwork is to be auctioned after July 4 for New York City charities.

Kate Smith, 79, dies of respiratory failure

RALEIGH, N.C. - Kate Smith, whose rousing rendition of "God Bless America" and unflagging wartime fund-raising made her an enduring symbol of joyful patriotism, died Tuesday of respiratory arrest. She was 79.

Smith died at the emergency room of Raleigh Community Hospital, where she was taken after being stricken at her home, said nursing supervisor Mike Leisey. Smith had suffered brain damage during a diabetic coma in 1976 that made it difficult for her to walk or talk during her later years. Diabetes forced the amputation of her right leg above the knee in January, and she underwent a mastectomy May 9.

Smith, one of the most popular entertainers on radio during the 1930s and 1940s, had no formal music training. She called her voice a "God-given gift." More than 700 of her songs made the Hit Parade, including "The Music Goes Round and Round," "The Last Time I Saw Paris," "White Cliffs of Dover" and her theme song, "When the Moon Comes Over the Mountain." But she was most closely identified with "God Bless America," making it a virtual second national anthem and inspiring her nickname, "radio's own Statue of Liberty.'

General Motors recalls 1985 subcompacts

DETROIT — General Motors Corp. has recalled 87,000 1985 subcompact cars featuring the J-body platform for removal of a plastic ornament that could cause an engine fire.

The cars include the Chevrolet Cavalier, Oldsmobile Firenza, Buick Skyhawk and Cadillac Cimarron, GM said Monday.

GM said a plastic cap that fits over the air cleaner and is stamped with the words "2.0 Liter Fuel Injection" should be removed and thrown away. Owners can do this easily and don't have to take their cars to dealers, the company said.

GM 14 months ago recalled 34,000 Cavaliers with the same problem. The company said mechanics sometimes reassembled air cleaners improperly or left ornaments resting on engine parts, where they melted. GM said it knew of 13 engine fires, but no accidents or injuries, resulting from melting ornaments.

Bad luck for Goodwill continues after fire

HOUSTON - Goodwill Industries, which moved into a new building after a devastating warehouse fire, was hit with more bad luck as $20,000 worth of newly donated clothing was soaked because of a leaky roof.

"Most of the wet clothes are salvageable if we could dry them, but we lost our industrial dryer in the fire," Goodwill president Steve Lufburrow said Monday. A fire Friday destroyed Goodwill's main warehouse, prompting a plea for donations of used clothing. Over the weekend, residents sent four truckloads of clothing to an old building across the street from the destroyed warehouse. On Monday, 125 Goodwill workers sorted and priced the clothes, but massive thunderstorms dumped two inches of rain on the temporary headquarters and the water cascaded inside, Lufburrow said.

Goodwill is negotiating for another warehouse, he said.

Nebraska dieters can't beat Kansas dieters

McCOOL JUNCTION, Neb. - Despite some individuals who were big winners, townspeople here apparently were thwarted in their attempt to lose more weight than did the residents of Mullinville, Kan.

McCool Junction residents lost a total of 1,021 pounds between Feb. 27 and June 12, contest coordinator Jo Snodgrass said Tuesday. Of 184 people who initially entered the contest, 140 came back for the final weigh-in, she said. The average weight loss per person was 7.2 pounds. Marilyn Henning was the big loser in McCool Junction's contest, dropping 501/2 pounds. At the weigh-in last week, Henning attributed her success to a strict diet she began four months earlier when she fell on the ice and broke her leg. She spent 12 days in the hospital and six weeks in a nursing home following the accident. The weight loss has caused her blood pressure to drop from 290 over 150 to 130 over 70, Henning said. She said her next goal is to lose 30 pounds by Christmas. Tom White Jr. dropped 151/2 pounds to win the men's weight-loss competition in McCool Junction. A mother and son, Alice and Tom Neville, dropped a total of 271/2 pounds to win the competition for couples. Snodgrass and her husband gave the individual winners trophies. Mullinville's 209 dieters lost 2,231 pounds in an earlier weigh-in.

Tribute will focus on Menninger's career

TOPEKA - Author and lecturer Norman Cousins will lead a tribute to Dr. Karl Menninger and his wife, Jean, sponsored by the Mental Health Association in Kansas June 28 in Topeka.

Cousins will deliver a "perspective" on the career of Menninger, co-founder of the Menninger Foundation and still its chairman of the board. Others making tributes to Menninger, who will observe his 93rd birthday next month, include Georgia Neese Gray of Topeka, treasurer of the United States under President Harry S. Truman. Menninger was among nine people granted honorary degrees earlier this month at the 335th commencement ceremonies of Harvard University The Harvard tribute said he "crusaded through the pioneering days of psychiatry with undiminished vigor," and was "one of the first to call attention to the abuse of

Center considers move to alleviate space crisis

By The Collegian Staff

FONE Crisis Center is having a crisis of its own.

After operating out of a small office in the University for Man building for a number of years, Paul Nelson, coordinator of FONE, said he would like to have an office which has, among other things, a bathroom that isn't shared with the tenants

Nelson, junior in pre-nursing, said ideally he would like to keep the office in the community environment because if FONE moved on campus it would risk being viewed as a campus organization and would lose outside funding from groups such as the United Way.

Keeping FONE in an off-campus location would require additional funds, he said, so FONE is also looking at the possibilities of an office on

An on-campus location would be advantageous to students, Nelson said, because of its closeness to the residence halls. Another advantage to an on-campus office is that FONE would not be required to pay rent, he

Funding for FONE is currently allocated from student fees, Nelson said, and if FONE did not have to pay rent, this money could be redistributed to other areas within the crisis center.

Besides the potential loss of United Way funding, Nelson said another problem of an on-campus location is that it would need its own entrance to make the office inaccessible to the rest of the building for security

Area resident victim of apparent drowning

From staff and wire reports

A St. George man apparently drowned Tuesday in the Blue River after walking away from a development center for the disabled, authorities said.

Elmer Tisdale, 20, went into the river and became caught in a log jam, said Steve Harkness, Pottawatomie County undersheriff.

Tisdale was pronounced dead at The St. Mary Hospital about 4:15 p.m. He had walked away from the Challenger families have called to ask if he is available "if their clients opted to initiate suit."

Seven crew members died when Challenger exploded 73 seconds after its launch from the Kennedy Space Center on Jan. 28. A presidential commission investigating the accident said in a report released last week that the spacecraft was destroyed when a joint in the right solid booster rocket failed and caused a fuel tank to ignite. Morton Thiokol manufacturers the solid rocket booster.

"The presidential commission points to Morton Thiokol as the primary culprit," said Krist. The company, he said, "received hundreds of millions of dollars for doing their job and then did their job in a neglectful fashion."

Krist won a $350,000 judgement against Rockwell International for Betty Grissom, the widow of astronaut Gus Grissom who died in an Apollo spacecraft fire in 1967.

KC holds off A's, wins 3rd straight

By The Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. - The last pitch thrown by Danny Jackson was hit about 380 feet, but Kansas City center fielder Lynn Jones caught the ball and the Royals escaped with another one-run victory.

"It was a bad pitch, out over the plate, but Lynn made a good catch. I just went 'whew,' " Jackson said after the 2-1 triumph Tuesday over the Oakland A's.

The victory was Kansas City's third straight, with all three by one-run margins.

The A's left the bases loaded in the eighth, which ended with Jones pulling down Mike Davis' drive to deep center. Dan Quisenberry pitched the ninth and also got out of a bases-loaded jam.

Quisenberry appeared to have his seventh save in the bag when Carney Lansford hit a slow grounder toward first base with two outs, but Steve Balboni booted the ball for an error.

"That's why it's not over 'til it's over," Royals Manager Dick Howser said, repeating the old Yogi Berra line.

Quisenberry, who had walked a batter and allowed an infield single earlier, ended the game by retiring Jose Canseco on a soft grounder to the mound.

Jackson, 3-4, allowed seven hits in his eight innings and ended a personal four-game losing streak. Oakland rookie Bill Mooneyham, 1-1, took the loss but allowed only six hits in 7 1-3 innings.

"We're finally getting good pit-ching — but poor hitting," A's Manager Jackie Moore said.

The A's have gotten five straight strong outings from starters but lost three of the games, two by 2-1 scores and the other 3-2 in 11 innings.

Draft full of surprises; trade shuffles 1st pick

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - North Carolina's Brad Daughtery went No. 1, as expected, but to Cleveland instead of Philadelphia in an NBA draft marked by blockbuster trades and surprising choices Tuesday.

The Cavaliers got Philly's No. 1 pick in a last-minute trade Monday night, while the 76ers also sent former three-time MVP center Moses Malone and forward Terry Catledge to the Washington Bullets for center Jeff Ruland and forward Cliff Robinson.

The Indiana Pacers then made a puzzling decision to bypass 7-foot center William Bedford of Memphis State for 6-8 forward Chuck Person of Auburn.

The Los Angeles Lakers traded guard Mike McGee and their firstround pick, Notre Dame forward Ken Barlow, to Atlanta for the Hawks' top two choices, Louisville forward Billy Thompson and Kansas swingman Ron Kellogg.

The Cavaliers also got Ron Harper of Miami, Ohio, with the eighth pick. He had been widely projected as the No. 6 choice by Pheonix.

After the NBA champion Boston Celtics took Maryland forward Len Bias No. 2 and Golden State followed with 6-11 center-forward Chris Washburn of North Carolina State, the Pacers sent several teams scrambling to their telephones by taking Person of Auburn.

The Knicks stuck with their plan to take a forward in the first round by going with Kentucky's 6-8 Kenny Walker.

Phoenix, however, couldn't resist the opportunity for a top big man and opted for Bedford over Harper. Dallas then took 6-11 Roy Tarpley of Michigan before Cleveland grabbed

The biggest shocker of the first round came on the 24th and final pick. The Portland Trail Blazers, who took college player of the year Walter Berry with the 14th pick, took Arvidas Sabonis of the Soviet Union 10 picks later.

The Bullets took 6-9 forward John Williams of LSU, 19, with the 12th pick and guard Anthony Jones of Nevada-Las Vegas No. 21.

Denver, picking 16th and 18th, took guard Maurice Martin of St. Joseph's and forward Mark Alarie of Duke.

Other first-rounders included No. 9 Brad Sellers of Ohio State by Chicago, No. 10 Johnny Dawkins of Duke by San Antonio, No. 11 John Salley of Georgia Tech by Detroit, No. 13 Dwayne Washington by New Jersey, No. 15 Dell Curry of Virginia Tech by Utah, No. 17 Harold Pressley of Villanova by Sacramento, No. 19 Thompson by Atlanta, Buck Johnson of Alabama 20th by Houston, No. 22 Scott Skiles of Michigan State by Milwaukee and Barlow of Notre Dame 23rd by the

Two-sport star will double-up

Henson decides not to choose

By TONY CARBAJO City/Recreation Editor

Pardon Steve Henson, K-State's basketball and track recruit, if he can't find enough hours in a day to train for his dream of successfully competing in two sports for the Wildcats.

Henson, a consensus All-State first team pick in basketball, was a standout prepster at McPherson High School. The Bullpup athlete was voted Mr. Basketball in Kansas for 1986 and won the class 5A high jump championship in May. He plans to play basketball and compete in the decathalon on the track team next

Now, under the guidance of new Wildcat track coach John Capriotti, Henson is diligently working toward the Track Athletic Congress' Junior Nationals in Towson, Md., June

The 6-foot-1, 170-pound multi-sport star has already been active on the national track scene this summer when he won the high jump competition with a leap of 6-10 in the Golden West Invitational boys track and field meet in Sacramento, Calif., last weekend.

The meet featured the top eight high school senior high jumpers in the nation. Henson did not compete in the decathalon, an event he is a two-time Junior Olympic Champion in, because of a nagging hamstring injury he suffered during the high school track season.

Henson plans to compete in the high jump competition in one more national meet before gearing his full attention to the decathalon in the TAC Junior Nationals. The top two finishers in the TAC meet gain a berth to the first ever World Junior Track and Field Championships in Athens, Greece, July 16-20.

The third-ranked high jumper in "USA Today's" high school honor roll plans to compete in the Keebler Invitational this weekend in Chicago.

"He is a remarkable guy," Capriotti said. "I am happy to have him. I would give anything to have three or four months with him before this (TAC) meet."

If Henson fails to qualify for the World Junior Track and Field Championships, he can still pull an ace out of his pocket. He has already qualified for the Amateur Athletic Union national basketball tournament in Florida with a team from Kansas City. The AAU nationals run concurrently with the WJC.

Earlier this week, Henson also received confirmation from the 2048 N. Tuttle Creek Blvd.

Olympic Training Center in Colorado Springs, Colo., that he has been chosen to attend the Elite Jumpers Camp that will get underway later this summer.

As confident as Henson is that he can star in basketball and track, many experts are saying he will soon have to pick one sport or the other the days of the two-sport college athlete are over.

"I think if it were anyone but Steve Henson, it would be tough," Capriotti said. "Coach (Lon) Kruger and I know a good athlete when we see one. When basketball is on, that is his sport. Coach Kruger could not be any more supportive than he is. He is going to expect a lot of Steve Henson.

"I want him to do the things he wants to do. I can't wait to see him play basketball. I will be there rooting for him. He has the full support of the two coaching staffs."

"It will take more work than in high school," Henson said. "The two sports go together fairly well. No other sport will complement my track like basketball.

"I always jump best after basketball season," Henson said. "My best jumps were always after basketball."

As excited as Kruger is to get Henson, the coach's first signee after receiving the K-State job, Capriotti is equally elated about getting the heavily recruited athlete into purple and white running shorts.

"He will have a definite impact (on the team)," Capriotti said. "He goes 24 hours a day - a fierce competitor. He has a good perspective about the decathalon. He knows it will take years (to reach his peak). He has a long career in front of him. I am happy to have him on my team."

Getting Henson on K-State's team took a two-fold effort by Kruger and Capriotti. Henson knew basketball would be his bread-and-butter in college, but insisted on going to a school that would allow him to compete in both sports.

Kruger, a two-sport star at K-State in the early '70s, knows what challenges Henson faces. The two amazingly similiar backgrounds.

"A college athlete can be involved in more than one sport if he has clear priorities," Kruger said.

"I've never given any serious thought to quitting either sport," Henson said. "Basketball is the most important thing for me right now, but track is something I hope to stay involved with as a participant for a long time."

76ers trade Malone; move pleases all-star

By The Associated Press

HOUSTON - Nine-time all-star center Moses Malone, traded Tuesday by Philadelphia to its Atlantic Division rivals, the Washington Bullets, said he is happy to leave the 76ers because he felt stifled by the coaching staff.

The 76ers traded the the 6-foot-10 Malone, 31, and 6-6 forward Terry Catledge to Washington for 6-10 center Jeff Ruland and 6-9 forward Cliff Robinson in a deal that was announced hours before the start of the NBA draft.

"The coaches have been holding me back from playing my game," Malone, a three-time Most Valuable Player, said in Houston, his home. "I know I could play better than I played last year.'

"I'm going to love it. It's a great move. Washington's a great team."

Malone averaged 23.8 points and 11.8 rebounds last season. An injured eye socket suffered near the end of the regular season is we had to do it."

still healing, according to Malone, who missed the last seven games of the regular season and the playoffs in which the 76ers were eliminated in the Eastern Conference semifinals by the Milwaukee Bucks.

"I think the situation will be much better in Washington than in Philadelphia," Malone said.

Malone, who signed a six-year, $13 million contract with 76ers four years ago, said he had not wanted to stay in Philadelphia too long and anticipated being traded. Philadelphia officials had expected to have a difficult time reaching a new contract agreement with Malone and he said he thought finances played a part in the 76ers decision.

"I think they (Philadelphia) made a move on the basis of financial problems," he said.

"I have mixed emotions," Philadelphia owner Harold Katz said of trading Malone. "He has done a tremendous job for us. It was a hard decision to make. But to get these two quality players

Mexican government draws Helms' ire

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., charged Tuesday that Mexican President Miguel de la Madrid had been fraudulently elected in 1982 and said the country's government maintained "a double set of books - one public, one private."

Helms said Mexican sources had given him documents showing that de la Madrid, proclaimed the winner with 71.2 percent of the vote, actually won only 39.8 percent.

Such fraud, Helms maintained at a congressional hearing, was intended to perpetuate the 58-year rule of the Institutional Revolutionary Party

The hearing was the third Helms has conducted in which he has accused Mexico's government of corruption and fraud.

Helms also said publicly announced figures for legislative elections in 1985 show the ruling PRI won 71.1 percent of the votes while a rightist coalition won 18.2 percent and a leftist coalition took 6.0 percent.

Actually, Helms asserted, the PRI won only 48.0 percent of the vote with the rightist coalition taking 36.4 per- Helms were typed compilations of cent and the leftist coalition 10.4 percent.

"I'm well aware the Mexican government is going to deny it engages in double bookkeeping," said Helms, who challenged the Mexican government "to open up the election process to international review and inspection."

Helms said sources he did not identify had given him documents from the presidential election that amount to "a double set of books - one public, one private."

The documents made available by the purported election results and not copies of government documents. Charges of fraud are not new.

The strongest of six candidates defeated by de la Madrid for the presidency, Pablo Emilio Madero, charged after that election that the results "were not clean" and that opposition observers had not been allowed inside polling places.

Mexico faces serious economic difficulties and the United States has recently been instrumental in helping assemble an economic aid package designed to help its neighbor weather the difficulties it has faced as a result of precipitously falling oil prices.

But Helms said Mexico deserves no monetary help from the United States until it reforms its political system.

One subcommittee witness, William D. Rogers, a Washington attorney who served as assistant secretary of state for inter-American affairs in 1974 and 1975, said he believes Helms' claim will ignite anti-American demonstrations in Mexico similar to those that followed U.S. Customs Director William Von Raab's contention last month that drugs were pouring into the United States across the Mexican border because virtually all Mexican law enforcement officials were corrupt.

Sentencing set for July 31

Bell seeks new cocaine trial

By The Associated Press

WICHITA - Kansas City Chiefs defensive end Mike Bell will seek a new trial on cocaine-related convictions, according to his attorney.

The new trial will be sought on grounds that the federal judge who heard the trial admitted improper evidence, said Michael Wilson.

The motion for a new trial will be filed this week with U.S. District Judge Wesley Brown, Wilson said

Bell was convicted Friday of two counts of using the telephone to facilitate the purchase of cocaine and one count of attempting to possess cocaine. His brother, Mark, was convicted of one count of using the telephone to facilitate purchase of cocaine and one count of attempting to possess cocaine.

Lael Alkire, the attorney for Mark Bell, said Tuesday that he probably would seek a new trial for his client, but was not sure when a motion would be filed.

The main witness against the twin brothers was Coleman Lockett, who said he sold them cocaine on May 2. The jury heard taped telephone conversations which Lockett testified involved the sale of cocaine to the Bells.

The Bells testified they were discussing a real estate deal with Lockett.

Sentencing is set for July 31. The Chiefs have said they will decide Bell's status with the team following sentencing.

Reagan made his surprise announcement to a packed White House press room, where reporters had been told only to expect an important announcement.

The president said Burger informed him three weeks ago that he had decided to retire after 17 years as chief justice to devote full time to his work as chairman of the commission that will lead the nation's celebration of the 200th anniversary of the Constitution in 1989.

Reagan said he immediately instructed Chief of Staff Donald T. Regan, Attorney General Edwin Meese III and White House counsel Peter J. Wallison to make recommendations for a successor.

A senior White House official. speaking on condition he not be identified, said Reagan picked Rehnquist from a list of about a dozen potential candidates - all jurists - which was prepared for him. Reagan met with the justice about two weeks ago and offered him the job.

The president then selected Scalia from among others on the list, the of-

The official, who is familiar with the selection process and briefed reporters at the White House after the announcement, said Scalia was chosen largely because he is "one of the principal exponents of the president's philosophy of judicial restraint."

He described that philosophy as an approach to law in which "the courts do not assert their own authority to change or to modify or to strike down those laws that are adopted by the democratic branches, by the Congress or executed by the president, unless the Constitution specifically so requires."

The official insisted, however, that "there was no litmus test" for picking a justice on the basis of his specific beliefs and that Scalia was not subjected to any screening of his opinions on abortion or school

Reagan said Rehnquist "has served with great distinction and skill" during his 15 years on the Supreme Court. "He is noted for his intellectual power, the lucidity of his opinions and the respect he enjoys among his colleagues.

Scalia was named by Reagan to the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Washington in 1982. He was chief of the three-judge special court panel that ruled unconstitutional the Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction law. An appeal has been heard by the Supreme Court and a decision is pen-

"His great personal energy, the force of his intellect and the depth of his understanding of our constitutional jurisprudence uniquely qualify him for elevation to our highest, court," Reagan said.

Scalia would be Reagan's second appointee to the Supreme Court. The first was Sandra Day O'Connor, a law school classmate of Rehnquist. "If it were not for the bicentennial

(of the Constitution), I would not have retired." Burger told reporters. Being chief justice, he said, has been 'a lot of fun.'

But he said preparations for the bicentennial have been inadequate so far, that the commission is seriously under-financed with "a piddling appropriation of $12 million" and does not have a headquarters The story of the Constitution, he said, is "one of the great, great stories in American history, and it's our job to tell it." The chief justice said he had never felt better physically, but that a member of his staff told him recently he had "logged 105 hours" in one week at the same time he was fighting a flu bug.

"Now 80 or 90 (hours) I can handle but I' m getting a little bit old for 105," Burger said.

AT&T, union reach tentative pact

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - American Telephone & Telegraph Co. and a union representing 155,000 striking telephone workers Tuesday reached a tentative settlement on a new contract, a union spokeswoman said. Under the agreement, the strike by the Communications Workers of America could end as early as Sunday, said Rozanne Weissman, the union spokeswoman.

Details of the accord were not immediately available. Weissman said the tentative national contract agreement was reached during a bargaining session Tuesday morning.

The settlement, however, is still subject to the successful completion of separate bargaining agreements with six different AT&T units and ratification by CWA members. A midnight Saturday deadline has been set for wrapping up those negotia-

"The strike continues until those six agreements are reached," Weissman said. "Assuming those agreements are reached by the Saturday deadline, CWA members can return to work the following

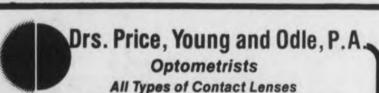

Bargaining talks on the six separate agreements are continuing in New Jersey, she said.

A smaller union, the International Brotherhood of Electrical Workers, ratified the bulk of AT&T's final three-year contract over the weekend. Most of the approximately 41,000 IBEW members employed by AT&T had continued to work during the strike by CWA members.

Federal mediators jumped into the dispute the second day after the strike began, often shuttling messages between the two sides when direct negotiations broke

Air crash causes 26 fatalities

By The Associated Press

GRAND CANYON VILLAGE, Ariz. - A helicopter and a twinengine plane carrying a total of 26 sightseers and crew collided and crashed in flames into the Grand Canyon on Wednesday, killing everyone aboard.

Coconino County sheriff's department officers reported 20 dead from the plane, which was carrying mostly foreign tourists, and six dead from the helicopter, said John Guthrie, deputy superintendent of the Grand Canyon National Park.

The dead aboard the De Havilland Twin Otter airplane included 11 from the Netherlands, two from Switzerland, one from South Africa and six from the United States, including the two pilots, Guthrie said. He had no breakdown on the dead aboard the helicopter.

The aircraft went down several hundred yards apart on a rugged hillside north of the Colorado River and about one mile south of the Grand Canyon's north rim. None of the charred debris was recognizable from the air.

Recovery of the bodies probably would not begin until Thursday, Guthrie said.

Larry Bjork of the Federal Aviation Administration's flight service station at Prescott, Ariz., said the plane and helicopter were both operating under visual "see and be seen" flight rules and neither was being tracked by FAA radar.

Bjork said neither of the pilots were required to file a flight plan with the Prescott facility because companies that fly sightseeing tours out of the Grand Canyon airport "normally provide their own flight following service" that consists mainly of keeping track of departing and returning aircraft.

The plane belonged to Grand Canyon Airlines and the helicopter to Helitech. A spokesman for Grand Canyon Airlines said the company was preparing a statement. No one answered the telephone at the office of Helitech in Tusayan, just outside the canyon

Sam Whitted, a spokesman for the Coconino County Sheriff's Department, said the crash occurred about 9:30 a.m. over the Crystal Rapids area of the canyon, about 12 miles west of Grand Canyon Village on the canyon's South Rim.

"They both were tour aircraft. That's about all we know right now," said Darla Milcher, an administrative aide for the sheriff's department.

"We got a report of a smoke column. Since we're in a high fire mode right now our first reaction was to check it right away," said Guthrie. "We discovered it was a plane on fire. We put one park ranger down on site. As part of that operation we discovered a second column of smoke. We immediately knew it was a midair collision."

He said the aircraft crashed in steep terrain, making the recovery of bodies difficult.

The crash came almost 30 years after an airliner accident over the canyon in which 128 people died. At the time, it was the worst airline disaster in history

On June 30, 1956, a United DC-7 airliner with 58 people aboard and a TWA Super Constellation airliner carrying 70 people apparently collided in flight during flights from Los Angeles and crashed in the canyon.

In August 1983, a sightseeing plane dodging thunderstorms on a flight to the Grand Canyon slammed into the face of a mountain overlooking the chasm, killing all 10 people aboard.

There are an estimated 50,000 flights each year over the canyon, including those mounted by 40 companies in five states, according to the Grand Canyon National Park.

Environmentalists, hikers and others have called for limits on flights over the park, saying the noise disturbs the canyon's tranquili-

The National Park Service has rejected proposed limits on days and times of flights around the canyon, but is studying proposals to ban planes below the canyon's rim in an effort to reduce noise.

The Grand Canyon, one of the natural wonders of the world, is about one mile deep and four to 18 miles wide, and stretches 217 miles in northwestern Arizona. Its multicolored rocks, deep rims and isolated mesas make it a mecca for

Legislators endorse sanctions

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The House unexpectedly approved on Wednesday legislation calling for withdrawal of U.S. business investment in South Africa and an all-out trade embargo, the harshest sanctions yet proposed against the white-minority Pretoria government.

The punitive steps approved by voice vote on a substitute amendment for the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986 came at a time of rising indignation in Congress over apartheid in South Africa.

In approving the substitute for a measure which had been crafted by the House Foreign Affairs Committee, the lawmakers ignored a lastminute letter from national security adviser John Poindexter, who argued that punitive sanctions would cripple U.S. diplomacy and "strengthen the hands of extremists. The vote came after Rep. Ronald Dellums, D-Calif., said the crisis in South Africa calls for the abandonment of timidity. The bill approved was a Dellums amendment which substituted for language developed by members of the committee. The panel's bill would have imposed a ed when Republicans did not demand roll call votes, and some lawmakers said they saw that as an attempt to ultimately prevent any sanctions from actually being imposed. Strong medicine is needed "to end this madness," he declared.

Dellums had called on the House to discard halfway measures and to adopt "an all out, powerful, aggressive statement.

"I'm going to have a heart attack," an astonished Dellums said after the vote. He said he thought the Republicans did not ask for a roll call vote because "the momentum is on our side. The Republicans don't have the numbers to wreck this legisla-

Rep. William Gray, D-Pa., proclaimed: "This is historic; the House just voted total disinvestment." The vote came during the week which marks the 10th anniversary of riots in the black township of Soweto, an event seen as a benchmark in the history of South Africa's black majority's resistance to apartheid.

If adopted by the Senate and signed into law by President Reagan, the bill would order all U.S. companies out of South Africa within 90 days and impose a total trade embargo.

The vote came as a surprise because it authorized sanctions far more strict than those which initially had been debated by House members.

House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., D-Mass., had said earlier he had the votes not only to pass the sanction bill, but to override a presidential veto should that prove necessary.

Supporters of the sanctions measure, including Rep. Howard Wolpe, D-Mich., said it is essential for Congress to affirm "that we will no longer be an accomplice to apar-

Trial of ship hijackers begins

By The Associated Press

Christmas in June

GENOA, Italy - The trial began Wednesday of those accused in the Achille Lauro hijacking, two days of terror at sea in which an invalid American was killed, but the alleged mastermind was among the defendants still at large.

Only five of the 15 defendants were in the court, handcuffed and sitting in metal-barred cages. The 10 fugitives being tried in absentia include Mohammed Abbas, also known as Abul Abbas, the Palestinian guerrilla leader accused of planning the

The trial scene is a chamber built under the courthouse like a wartime bunker. A police helicopter circled overhead Wednesday, and 600 officers stood guard. People entering the court were searched with X-rays and metal detectors.

Completion date set for biochem building

Demolition of the greenhouses across from Willard Hall is scheduled to begin next week so construction of the new chemistry-biochemistry building can begin, said Vincent Cool, University architect, who is responsible for the capital improvements program.

The general contractor, Dondlinger and Sons Construction Co. Inc. from Wichita, fenced off the construction site Wednesday. An asbestos removal crew is scheduled to begin clearing the greenhouses of the substance later this week.

Excavation of the lot is the first scheduled phase of construction. Once excavation is complete, construction of the concrete framework will begin.

"We are going to make an attempt to get the concrete work done before bad weather hits in the winter," Cool said. "The entire process will take approximately two years. We will begin holdng classes in the new structure by the fall of 1988."

Knight-Remmelle Associates of Topeka designed the new building space," Cool said.

which will cost more than $10 million. The four-story building will connect with King Hall at all floors and will house a variety of undergraduate and graduate laboratories for chemistry and biochemistry, Cool said. There will also be a number of service labs as well as administrative and faculty offices. There will be no large lecture halls or library facilities.

Dondlinger and Sons is the primary contractor. Other contractors working on the project include Young's Inc. of Topeka, Shelley Inc. of Wichita, and Kewaunee Lab Equipment Co. of Statesville, N.C.

Total cost of the project is $10.3 million.

When construction of the building is completed, parking near it will be limited. In anticipation of the possible parking problems generated by the new facility, lot A3, at the corner of Anderson and North Manhattan avenues, and lot A5, next to Justin Hall, were enlarged last summer.

WASHINGTON - Relatively few agricultural banks have applied for special regulatory relief under new eased capital requirements aimed at helping institutions victimized by the farm depression, regulators say.

"Agricultural banks, in spite of significant recognized problems, remain among the strongest capitalized banks in the country," said A. David Meadows, associate director of bank supervision for the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation.

Meadows told a House Government Operations subcommittee on Tuesday that just 37 of the 2,700 state-chartered agricultural banks FDIC regulates have applied for capital forbearance.

John F. Downey, chief bank examiner for the Comptroller of the Currency, said just 14 of 870 eligible nationally chartered banks have applied for the relief. Disposition of most of the applications is still pending, the regulators said.

Capital forbearance gives banks more leeway to absorb loan losses and to restructure problem loans, actions which normally could lead to regulatory sanctions because they can reduce bank capital below reguired minimums.

The forbearance offer allows capital levels below those normally required, so long as they can gradually climb back to required levels over a period of up to seven years. The offer also is open to banks with large proportions of their loan portfolios in the oil industry, which is suffering similar financial pains. The intent of the program, which the regulators adopted under pressure from farm-state lawmakers, is to make it easier for banks to restructure farm loans and allow farmers a chance to pay off old debts under easier terms.

Although requests for the special consideration have been slow to flow banks to operate temporarily with in during the program's first two months of operation, more may come later in the year, said Meadows.

> "What exists are farm banks with significant volumes of loans which may need to be restructured or may result in a loss to the bank in the future depending on the strength of the farm economy over the next year or so," he told the subcommittee.

"For many farm borrowers, 1986 may be a critical year for determining their continuing viability," he said. But many farmers and their bankers are waiting until they see the results of this fall's harvest to assess their financial standing.

Wefald receives snooker table on loan

By The Collegian Staff

When President Duane Acker leaves K-State, a change of decor is in store for the president's house.

Not only will President-elect Jon Wefald and his family move their personal belongings to 100 Wilson Court on the K-State campus, a snooker table from the Union recreation room will also be added.

Snooker is a variety of the game of pool played with 15 red balls and six other balls.

'We're going to loan a snooker table to him," Walt Smith, Union director, said.

The snooker tables are available for students' use. But, as Smith pointed out, they are used very little and aren't nearly as popular as the pool tables provided by the Union.

Currently, the Union has two snooker tables it has been trying to sell. Neither have been sold because a decent bid has not been received for the tables.

"We got a $600 bid for one of the tables, but the buyer backed out of it," Smith said. The $600 bid was acceptable, but no other decent bids have been received, he said.

The announcement of an increase in K-State's preliminary summer school enrollment compared to 1984 figures, marks the second consecutive semester enrollment has increased. This trend needs to continue if the University is to battle back from several semesters of declining enrollment.

After an all-time high of 19,982 students in 1981, enrollment at K-State dropped nearly 2,000 students from 19,497 in the fall of '82 to 17,570 last fall. School officials blamed the declining figures on the tapering off of the baby-boom generation and a depressed state economy.

Enrollment finally showed an increase this spring of 37 students from 18,148 in 1985 to 18,185. It was by no means a huge rise, but it was a step in the right direction. And this summer's preliminary figure of 4,226 students is 244 more than last summer.

As Jon Wefald prepares to become the University's next president on July 1, he is faced with the task of continuing the upward trend seen so far in 1986. There is a long way to go to bring enrollment up to the 1981 level, but Wefald has said that recruitment and retention will be two of his main concerns.

Already Wefald has taken charge, announcing last month the creation of eight admissions counselors who will be in charge of contacting and recruiting prospective students. It is hoped that this move, along with other ideas from the new administration, will help enrollment continue to increase - something K-State desperately needs.

Fat cat grows bigger

Garfield, the well-known comic strip feline, is 8 years old today. As the second most popular comic strip character in the country, the fat cat has grown tremendously in popularity and will celebrate today along with millions of readers.

The comic strip first appeared in 41 newspapers in 1978 and is seen in 1,800 newspapers today.

The credit for the Garfield comic strip's popularity should go to Jim Davis, Garfield's creator. Davis has developed a character that deals with life's problems in a funny way. With dry wit and keen satire Davis pokes fun at the annoying situations and details of everyday we often forget to laugh about.

Program aids recruitment efforts

This summer, some Kansas high school students are foregoing the traditional summer at the lake and are opting to go to school instead. They are advancing toward a college degree and exploring career fields.

Organized by the Division of Continuing Education, "Welcome to a K-State Summer" is a new program of courses geared for high school students. The courses, ranging from building leadership skills to science in agriculture, all ning their high school diplomas:

cost money, but room and board is included.

By visiting K-State before they graduate from high school, the students develop an awareness of the opportunities available to them at the university level. That familiarity helps in recruiting students. When one is comfortable with something, there is less uncertainty or fear of making the wrong choice. The students also have a reason to return after earthey have college credit from K-State.

Continuing Education should be credited for its recruitment and retention efforts. The program gives students the knowledge they want while building awareness of K-State and what it has to offer. The division is also promoting the land-grant mission which is essential to the very being of the

Honoring U.S. virtues hides faults

America, America. God shed his grace on thee. And crown thy good with brotherhood from sea to shining sea.

As a prelude to our nation's 210th birthday. Time magazine printed a special issue titled "American Best." It not only attempts to show the best that America has to offer, but portrays America as having the best of everything.

Time shows the reader that America's unique "pop culture" has a flavor all of its own. From Sly Stallone's Rambo to Mr. T and his "A-Team" cohorts, from Little Richard to Bruce "the Boss" Springsteen, from George Jetson and his cartoon space family to "The Monkees," America has had one of the most diverse entertainment industries in the world.

America even spreads the culture by exporting its celebrities to foreign lands -Stevie Wonder to South Africa, Mickey Mouse to Japan, Andy Williams to China and the Chicago Bears to our staid mother coun-

While American culture reigns throughout the world, Time implies that Yankee ingenuity never took second place in business and industry.

Being impatient people, Americans revolutionized commerce by making speed a determining factor. We lay claim to the concept of fast food (McDonald's), fast photos

(Polaroid) and fast delivery (Federal Express)

Boeing has monopolized on the Wright brothers' invention to become the leading manufacturer of jet aircraft in the free world, while International Business Machines Inc. ranks as the most profitable industrial corporation in the world.

By trading $970 billion worth of shares, The New York Stock Exchange claimed first place in the world market, outdistancing the second runner-up, Tokyo exchange, by more than $570 billion.

According to the article, America is the capital of theme parks, the wizard of special effects and the prima ballerina of dance. But with all these wonderful novelties and achievements, America still has problems. The country has an ineffecient welfare system that eats more dollars out of the federal budget than the defence programs do. Although the status of women and blacks has improved through the work of NOW and NAACP, discrimination against blacks and women still permeates every corner of America's society.

Americans strive to make more money so they can isolate themselves from their inferiors. Since they no longer have any interest in the public, they soon see no reason why they should give financial support for public works. Consequently, quality of the once-outstanding public facilities such as the subway systems or public parks has deteriorated. Carlos Fuentes, a Mexican writer, made a painful observation about American diplomacy when he said that what the United States does worst is understand other peoples.

Americans have always thought of themselves as THE best in the world. Consequently, we think this country offers THE best of everything.

While this country has many virtues, it also has many problems. The Fourth of July is a festive occasion, and remembering the virtues of the United States is the easiest thing to do. But analyzing the country's problems and striving to correct them would do the country more good in the long run.

Agency warns consumers against Excedrin

WASHINGTON - Consumers nationwide were warned Wednesday night to stop using Extra-Strength Excedrin capsules, after the Food and Drug Administration found cyanide in a bottle of capsules that had reportedly been taken by a Seattle man who died earlier this month.

The Commerce Department said the gross national product, the broadest measure of economic health, was growing at a rate only slightly better than the weak 2.2 percent growth turned in during all of 1985.

The department a month ago had estimated GNP growth at a much faster 3.7 per-Analysts said continued sluggishness in a variety of sectors in the first six months of this year had virtually doomed the administration's chances of achieving its hoped-for 4 percent growth this year. The reduction in GNP growth from earlier estimates came from an upward revision in the country's foreign trade deficit. This change alone subtracted almost $8 billion from the growth figure.

Candidate suggests opponents limit funds

OVERLAND PARK - Secretary of State Jack Brier received little support Tuesday for his suggestion that his opponents for the Republican nomination for governor limit primary campaign spending to $350,000.

Five of the seven GOP candidates in the Aug. 5 primary appeared at a news conference sponsored by the Overland Park Chamber of Commerce and were asked about Brier's recent plea in a letter to cut campaign spending Gene Bicknell, a millionaire businessman from Pittsburg, said he felt the suggestion was irrelevant since "one candidate had spent close to that" already. He was referring to Larry Jones, a Wichita businessman, who said his campaign would spend $500,000 to $750,000.

Jones was critical of Brier for "rewriting the rules" and echoed Bicknell's feeling that current officeholders have the advantage of several years of free publicity. House Speaker Mike Hayden of Atwood agreed that campaign spending is excessive but said he would not go along with Brier's suggestion.

Railroad planning to abandon Kansas lines

PITTSBURG - Burlington Northern Railway has filed notice it intends to abandon four lines in southeast Kansas. The routes to be abandoned are Cherokeee to Parsons, Arcadia to Mertz, Columbus, Kan., to Carthage, Mo., and Baxter Springs to Galena. Burlington Northern filed notice this week with the Interstate Commerce Commission that it intended to abandon the lines within three years. The lines were being abandoned because they carried very little traffic, said Jack Martin, manager of corporate communications for Burlington Northern.

Abandoning the lines could hurt farmers by making it harder to ship grain and by increasing the price of fertilizer, which is more costly to ship by truck than by train, said Gary Mitchell, manager of the McCune Farmers Union Co-op Elevator.

Arkansas River sand pit site of drowning

GARDEN CITY - A 4-year-old boy drowned in a sand pit Tuesday evening while his baby sitter was trying to rescue another boy in the water.

The Finney County Sheriff's Department said Brandon Hoffman of Garden City was pulled under water by the swift current in the pit along the Arkansas River near Garden City. Rescue workers found him about 30 minutes later but efforts to revive him were unsuccessful. Authorities said Vera Rowlands, 26, was taking care of several boys when 8-yearold Quincy Madrigal was pulled under water by the strong current while swimming in the sand pit.

Officers said Rowlands went into the water in an effort to save the 8-year-old boy and the Hoffman boy followed her. A deputy sheriff patrolling the area saved the

The sand pits, which are used by sand companies in the area, are in the generally dry Arkansas River. They look like ponds but have strong undercurrents enhanced by increased water flow recently in the river.

Film crew documents Kansas for TV series

WICHITA — Tom and Sheryl Giessel had special guests this year as they went through the annual wheat harvest tension of praying for the weather to hold, hustling grain to the elevator, and long hours of sweaty labor.

Last weekend, the Giessels got a chance to try to explain why a young farm family struggles to keep its hopes and dreams alive. A production company from Maine filmed the Giessels for an hour-long documentary about Kansas in the monthly "Portrait of America" series on the Turner Broadcasting System, an Atlanta-based television network.

KC continues hitting slump

By The Associated Press

OAKLAND, Calif. - Curt Young pitched himself in and out of trouble frequently Wednesday to win a duel from Cy Young Award winner Bret Saberhagen.

Both pitchers finished with fourhitters, but the only hit that mattered was Dave Kingman's 15th homer of the season. It gave Young and the Oakland A's a 1-0 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

"I think Saberhagen made just a little mistake on that pitch," A's Manager Jackie Moore said.

"He hit a fastball up and inside. I thought it was a pretty good pitch, myself," Kansas City Manager

Saberhagen, 20-6 last season when he won ther Cy Young Award, is 4-7 this year and has yet to win two straight games.

"But he's pitched good. He could easily be 7-4, should be at least .500, and his ERA is down to about 3.10," Howser noted.

Kingman drilled a 2-2 pitch over the left field fence with one out in the second inning for the 422nd home run of his career. The A's designated hitter brought a .197 batting average and 2-for-19 slump into the game.

"But that's what he does best," Moore said. "I'm not going to try to make a singles hitter out of him."

Kingman has provided the gamewinning RBI in five of the A's last six victories. Unfortunatly for the fourth-place team, it has won only three of its last 14 games and only seven games in 3 1/2 weeks.

Young allowed leadoff batters to reach base in six innings, including the eighth when his shutout was preserved by a play at the plate.

"That's not something I want to do, but that's part of the fun in pitching - trying to make up for the mistakes you make," he said.

Mike Brewer opened the eighth with a double, went to third on a sacrifice and was thrown out at home when Lonnie Smith grounded to shortstop Alfredo Griffin.

Independence junior college players enter plea on felony theft charges

By The Associated Press

INDEPENDENCE, Kan. - Two athletes at Independence Community College pleaded guilty and two others pleaded innocent Wednesday to charges they stole music and electronic equipment from the school.

Pleading guilty to one count of felony theft were Allan T. Barnes, 19, of Wichita, Kan., and Mark A. Raines, 18, of Miami.

Entering innocent pleas to felony charges of burglary and theft were Harvey Grant III, 20, of Sparta, Ga., and Keven E. Roberts, 18, of Grand Rapids, Mich.

burglary charge against Barnes and Raines and set sentencing for July

No trial date was set for Grant and Roberts.

Barnes and Raines were charged in the May 3 theft of musical equipment from the school's Fine Arts Building. Grant and Roberts were accused in the burglary of electronic equipment from the college media center March 29-30.

Paul Barber, 21, of Long Island, N.Y., pleaded guilty earlier to one count of burglary and was placed on two years probation.

Grant, Barber and Barnes were

Judge David Thompson dropped a starters on the basketball team. Raines was a red-shirt member of the football team and Roberts was a red-shirt member of the basketball

> Grant, who signed a Southeast Conference letter-of-intent with Kentucky before he was charged with the burglary, has reportedly been dropped by Head Coach Eddie Sutton from financial aid. He said later he would then attend Georgia State.

> The 6-11 junior college All-American was recruited by more than 100 schools and seriously considered attending Kansas before electing to sign with Kentucky.

University will benefit from 2 energy grants

By BECKY HOWARD Collegian Reporter

Two grants awarded by the U.S. Department of Energy will enable K-State to make energy conservation improvements in several campus

A technical assistance grant of approximately $32,000 will fund the hiring of an engineering firm to conduct surveys of King, Shellenberger, Ward and Cardwell halls, as well as the Natatorium and Farrell Library, said Joel McGill, K-State requirements analyst. McGill is responsible for preparing grant applications for the energy conservation program.

"Similar surveys were conducted earlier in the year on Fairchild, Willard, Seaton Court, Seaton, Anderson, Waters, Justin and Ackert halls," McGill said. Results from the surveys on each building were cataloged into a book form, with each book containing ideas as to how energy can be conserved in each of those buildings, he said.

One item from the survey results concerning the air conditioning in Ackert was selected to be sent to the Department of Energy for a grant re-

The result was the second grant a $68,912 energy conservation measure grant, which will fund the change from a "dual duct" air conditioning system to a "variable air volume" system. "The whole program is called the Conservation Institutional

Program," McGill said. "Institutions are awarded grants funded by the Department of Energy and, in our case, that amount is matched by the Kansas Board of Regents.

"The grants enable us to not only hire the consultant firm to find the ways to conserve energy, but also give us the funding to do the actual construction for the energy conservation measures," he said.

Institutions are awarded the grants on the basis of a ranking system. The Department of Energy ranks the institutions according to how efficient their energy conservation measures will be able to "pay back" the money required to fund them, McGill said.

"Money saved by an energy conservation measure will eventually match the money required to fund it," he said. "As long as there is funding for this program, we will continue to make technical surveys of all campus buildings and work on implementing energy conservation

Job program assists farmers; system to provide retraining

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - A job training and employment program designed to aid displaced farmers, called the Rural Employment Assistance Program, will get underway July 7 with the opening of field offices in eight Kansas towns, Gov. John Carlin announced Friday.

Regional REAP offices will be located in Beloit, Chanute, El Dorado, Hays, Highland, Lyndon, Pratt and Scott City and workers in each city will be plugged into a referral network that includes the state Employment and Training Offices, county extension offices and the Farmers' Assistance, Counseling and Training Services program know as FACTS.

"This initiative substantially increases the job-training opportunities available through the FACTS referral program and expands the array of services provided to struggling Kansas farmers,' Carlin told his weekly news conference. "It represents the kind of cooperative effort among state agencies that is needed to adequately serve farmers."

Sue Miller, formerly a dislocated worker representative in the Department of Human Resources with 10 years experience in the field, helped design the new program and has been appointed director of REAP.

The REAP program is to be funded by a $1 million grant from the federal Department of Labor which Carlin requested. The state employment agency will supply an additional $200,000 from other federal sources to pay for the program.

Basically, displaced farmers will be given assistance in finding new work, developing skills needed to qualify for different jobs and in seeking out employment and perhaps relocation.

Interested farmers can get information about the program and apply for help by calling the toll-free FACTS hotline, 1-800-321-3276.

Farmers who want to get out of the agriculture business because they are unable to make a living, or those who already have lost their farms, will be able to visit a REAP office to examine their employment options.

If a farmer is deemed in need of additional training, the state will pay the farmer's tuition and buy any supplies needed to attend vocationaltraining schools or pick up necessary classes. The bulk of any schooling is to be vocational training to develop new skills or hone existing ones.

Carlin said the goal is to provide services to 600 Kansas farmers and to place at least 60 percent of them in permanent jobs. REAP workers will review the case of every farmer to determine whether an individual would benefit most from on-the-job training, classroom teaching or simply in job search.

"It is appropriate that states suffering from the unemployment relating to the agriculture crisis be able to use federal employment funds to assist their farmers," Carlin said. "These are specific and valuable services which could not have been done cause of our limited

Citing 'just violence'

Bishops encourage sanctions

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - The Roman South Africa, called Sunday for international sanctions against his government, saying the church may be forced to accept violence as the only way to banish apartheid.

"Violence is always a very regrettable development, but there is a long history in Christian tradition of just wars and just violence," said Archbishop Denis Hurley. "We have to accept this."

Hurley, speaking to reporters outside St. Patrick's Cathedral, said he was convinced the unrest and fighting in South Africa would not end until apartheid had been defeated.

"The blacks are determined to do away with it. They will accept whatever suffering comes their way in order to do it," said Hurley, president of the South African Bishops Conference. "And the white people are beginning to realize that the nle are serious about this "

Hurley said his group, made up of 30 South African bishops, encouraged other countries to enact sanctions against the administration of President P.W. Botha, but refused to detail what action should be taken.

"We have taken a somewhat mild stand. We believe sanctions are justifiable, but we do not feel that we can recommend what should be done at this time," said Hurley, who is white. "Something must be done. Some of the sanctions now can be effective, but the main pillars of apartheid remain untouched."

Hurley, who earlier had concelebrated Mass with New York Archbishop John J. O'Connor, addressed the congregation in the cathedral. He refused to offer any advice to the U.S. Senate on its impending vote on sanctions against South Africa. The House voted Wednesday to require that all U.S. businesses pull out of the strife-torn country.

Activities marking last Monday's 10th anniversary of the Soweto riots, which left hundreds of blacks dead in 1976, were rigidly controlled by the South African military, Hurley said.

"You might say the score was 1-1. There was a very successful work strike, but the government was able to suppress the more open protests," he said.

Hurley, who arrived in the United States last week and was to leave Sunday, discussed the current state of emergency in South Africa that has imposed a curfew, allowed arrests without cause, and imposed a partial news blackout.

"The state of emergency is a regular occurrence. It is a brief time of intensity in the overall process of liberation," he said.

for Lafene services

By SCOTT SEWELL Staff Writer

Students using Lafene Student Health Center in the future may notice some changes as a result of recommendations by a University subcommittee report completed last February.

According to the report, the subcommittee was formed to propose recommendations to William Sutton, vice president for educational and student services, and the Student Health Advisory Committee regarding future services and fee structure for the health center.

The study included the current fee structure, a proposed $5 health fee increase - scheduled to take effect this fall - current services and how Lafene compares to similar institu-

The report indicated that the subcommittee also considered health care services offered elsewhere in Manhattan, current trends in health care, possible cost-saving measures, projected costs of services, the changing student population and its needs, and services not currently offered at Lafene but may be needed in the future.

The subcommittee, in its report to Sutton, decided the decline in student enrollmen and increasing costs of supplies and services currently offered by Lafene make it fiscally impossible for the facility to operate at the present level without adjustments in fees and/or services.

Beginning in the fall semester, students will be paying $5 more for student health fees per semester as was recommended by the Student Governing Association. The increase has been approved by the Kansas Board of Regents.

Dr. Robert Tout, director of Lafene, said it is only a "token increase." Tout said he requested a $30 increase in 1983, to take place over a three-year period, but the facility is just now receiving an increase.

Tout said he cannot complain about the increase because it will help, but added even more increases will be needed in the future if Lafene is to keep up with rising health care

Last year was the first year Lafene went in the red, ending with a balance of about $19,000. Tout said he is proud of the health center doing well for so long, but remains concerned about Lafene's future.

"If students want a student health center, they should support it or it will close," Tout said.

Sutton said the $5 increase will have to do for now. But in the meantime, he said, changes need to be made to make Lafene more effec-

"Cost-saving measures must first be implemented before there can be an increase in student health fees," said Phoebe Samelson, adviser in the dean's office of the College of Arts and Sciences.

Sutton agreed, saying, "I hate to ask for money from students, and not be able to tell them why it is needed."

Three bomb explosions rocked Durban within hours of each other, one starting an oil refinery blaze early Sunday and polluting an exclusive Indian Ocean yacht club and surrounding sea.

Durban explosions — one outside a downtown movie house, one at a chemical plant south of the city, and one at the nearby Durban oil refinery, starting a blaze that raged for two hours near giant fuel storage depots surrounding the complex.

Firefighters and conservation workers battled through the day spraying anti-pollution foam onto more than a half-mile slick of crude oil seeping from the blasted pipeline into the sea and the Bluff Hill Yacht Club. Extra supplies of detergent were flown to the port from Johannesburg, 375 miles away.

No group claimed responsibility. But the bombings were in line with previous attacks by the outlawed African National Congress, the main guerrilla group fighting to oust the white-led government.

Telexes sent Sunday to the black guerrilla group's exile headquarters in Lusaka, Zambia, went unanswered. Last week, ANC President Oliver Tambo said during a visit to Paris that his guerrillas may have planted the car bomb, but he was not

The state Bureau of Information described the blasts as minor. The bureau is the only source of official news since the government declared a nationwide state of emergency June 12, giving police and troops wide powers and imposing unprecedented curbs on the press.

The regulations forbid reporting police or troop activity without official permission.

In its daily bulletin on antiapartheid and other violence, the bureau reported one fatality in the 24 hours until early Sunday, a black man killed by a mob in Soweto. That brought to 55 the death toll since the emergency.

The first of the three Durban blasts, shortly before Saturday midnight, was caused by a limpet mine hidden in a garbage can outside the movie theater, the Information Bureau said.

Supreme Court rules on harassment

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - Women's groups are hailing a Supreme Court ruling against on-the-job sexual harassment as a great victory that will have a practical impact on the

"The court's ruling sends a message to the workforce at large that sexual harassment is a serious problem and is against the law," Fredda Merzon, acting executive director in Albany, N.Y., of the Center for Women in Government, said Thursday.

She spoke after the court, by a unanimous vote, ruled that sexual harassment on the job is illegal even if its victims are not hurt economically.

The decision made these other key points:

Sexual harassment violates a federal anti-discrimination law, known as Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, if it creates a "hostile environment" in the workplace.

Evidence of a woman's allegedly provocative conduct or clothing may be used as a defense

Employers are not always legally responsible when, unknown to them, their supervisors sexually harass employees.

Employers cannot escape legal liability in some cases even if they did not know, and could not have known, about the sexual harassment.

- Employers cannot protect themselves against legal liability simply by creating internal grievance procedures for alleged victims of sexual harassment.

"Working women have won a significant victory," said Washington lawyer Joanne Hustead, who represented numerous women's groups in the case. "It's a very important decision with great practical impact."

reasons. Two of the reasons include renewing teaching certificates and adding special education as an option on the teaching certificates. Summer graduate students are not primarily seeking additional degrees, she said.

How often teachers must renew their certificates depends on the original certificate they acquire. People who teach are automatically eligible for five-year certificates. Those who do not teach must renew on credit hours and receive threeyear certificates.

For people with master's degrees, six credit hours are required for renewal. For those without master's degrees, eight credit hours are required for renewal, Hayden said.

Horn said the benefits of taking summer school at K-State are many.

'We offer summer programs that are attractive and useful for practicing professional educators," Horn said. That not only includes teachers, but also counselors, principals and others, he said.

Jan Lohmann, a Wichita State University administrator, is taking six hours this summer and working toward a doctorate in adult and occupational education.

Lohmann commutes to K-State every Monday morning and drives back to Wichita every Thursday

Lohmann said she chose K-State because she knew several people who graduated from the adult and occupational education program at K-State and they seemed satisfied.

Festival attracts traveling artists

By DAVID HAWLEY Collegian Reporter

Jeff Johnson, a dulcimer craftsman, traveled 485 miles from Denver to be in Manhattan last

"I arrived here last Monday and spent most of my time at the River Pond Area (at Tuttle Creek State Park) while working on these," he said as he displayed his Appalachian Mountain Dulcimers.

Johnson didn't travel 485 miles just to work on his dulcimers, though. He was in town for the 11th Annual Arts and Crafts Festival, held Friday, Saturday and Sunday in City Park.

For many of the exhibitors, their crafts are just a hobby.

"I have drawn all my life, and when we retired from farming and the kids were all grown, we just kind of started up," said Margie Watkins, Troy. Watkins makes paintings on saw blades.

For others, making crafts is their livelihood.

Gary Gibson, Hays, said he started making his "nuts and bolts art" when he was laid off from an aircraft plant in Wichita. Claudia Mitchell came from Excelsior Springs, Mo., to be in the festival. She has been showing her leather crafts for about four years and attends nearly 40 festivals a year.

"I do it because I enjoy the people," she said. Albert Daniels, known as "The Woodbutcher," said making his wooden toys is a form of therapy. Daniels is from Parkville, Mo., where he said people do nothing but make arts and crafts. He said he doesn't make much money on the toys but just tries to get back what he puts into it.

"All I need is kids," he said. "And that's who I build for, because they are the future."

Intermittent rain Saturday kept some spectators away and forced some of the participants to close down early.

"We set up and tore down four times," said Wichita resident Betty Hinnenkamp, who makes lawn chairs with her husband Elmer. "The last time, we said 'that's it," and we shut down about an hour early. We had a good day, but I think we could have done better."

"It hurt sales on Saturday, but the people in charge do an excellent job of letting people know what the weather conditions are," said Don Smith, Topeka. Smith has been showing his art for five years and has scheduled about 15 festivals this year.

Marlea Martinson, assistant coordinator for the festival, said the event was expected to draw 10,000 spectators over the three

Band plays bluegrass music

Kansas band enjoys weekend diversion

By SANDY WINTER Collegian Reporter

Brett Hodges, the lead vocalist for the bluegrass band Last Kansas Exit, noticed several spectators watching the band go through its sound check early Saturday evening.

"I see we have some early concert goers," Hodges told them. "This is kind of like showing up for a ball game and watching batting practice. So if we sing out of tune, it doesn't count."

Hodges, who also plays guitar for the Lawrence-based band, and three other members of the band were in Manhattan to play an Arts in the Park concert in the City Auditorium. The location was moved from the stage in City Park because of rain.

Mandolin player Scott Tichenor said the band usually tours in a 300to 500-mile region doing weekend shows. The band is endorsed and sponsored by The Kansas Arts Commission and recently played in Salina as part of the Smoky Hill River Festival.

The band planned to travel to Arkansas following Saturday's concert, which was part of the 11th Annual Arts and Crafts Festival.

Although the band rarely tours outside the Midwest, it went to Nashville, Tenn., to compete with 60 other bands in the 1985 International Bluegrass Band Contest. Last Kansas Exit came home with first-place honors from the three-day, threeround contest.

Because bands are not allowed to compete in the contest after winning, Last Kansas Exit returned to Nashville this year as part of the regular entertainment, Tichenor

Tichenor said the band's weekend concerts are just "our diversion from our yuppie-type jobs." These jobs, he said, are the full-time careers the band members have during the week. Banjo player Mike Allen is a Russian translator for the government. Tichenor is a manager for a large corporation in Kansas City. Hodges is a computer programmer, and string bassist Ron DeLancy works for a pharmaceutical com-

The band got its start in 1984 when Tichenor and Allen decided to form the group. Tichenor said he and Allen played together often, and he always liked the way Allen played the banjo. Last Kansas Exit plays a blend of what Tichenor calls "mountain music, country blues and black gospel."

According to Tichenor, bluegrass music originated in Kentucky, evolving from folk music. Bluegrass music is a rather new form of music, dating back to the 1940s.

And it has always been an acoustic music. "You never plug any of the instruments in," Tichenor said.

The band members consider themselves to be very successful for the type of music they play. According to Tichenor, it's very hard for a bluegrass band to make as much as a country band. Last Kansas Exit, however, does very well in that respect, he said.

When asked where the band came up with the name for itself, Tichenor smiled and said the name was easily thought of because two of the band members once lived right on the state line...on the Last Kansas Exit, so to speak.

British comedy act performs at festival

By ANGELA O'HARA Staff Writer

The Duffy Brothers, an English bluegrass and comedy duo from Peterborough, England, gave Friday night's Arts in the Park crowd a taste of a different kind of entertainment.

The concert was in conjunction with the 11th Annual Arts and Crafts Festival in City Park.

Leo and Ray Duffy combine their talents on guitar, fiddle, banjo and mandolin with a British version of folk humor to present a show which has won them the title of British Country Music Association's Best British Duo the past three years.

The Duffy Brothers came to the United States after running the England country music club circuit. They said a typical crowd at one of the club shows in England is 300 to 400 people, quite a difference from opening for country singer Charley Pride where crowds are anywhere from 10,000 to 100,000 people.

Crowds aren't the only change the duo had to become accustomed to. Most of their shows in the United States, like Friday's performance, are outside. Outside performances are almost unheard of in England because of uncooperative weather, Leo said.

Some changes in word selection - like flashlight for torch - were implemented in the show not long after they began performing for American audiences, Leo said.

"We present our act in the way Americans would like it," he said. "A lot of performers don't do their homework enough.'

Leo said they can't afford to leave the audience wondering about what a word means. "They never catch up to you," he said.

And working with Pride has been a big help, they said.

'Charley advises us after shows about things he didn't understand," Ray said.

After the Friday night performance, the duo left for Dallas, which will be home base for the next year.

The Duffy Brothers, who have been getting more work each time they come back to the States, said they "wouldn't mind a bit" if they start spending most of their time

"We appreciate the American sense of humor," Leo said.

The duo will spend the rest of the year opening for Pride and performing some shows on its own, said tour coordinator Jimmy Carter.

"They've been hired back at nearly every festival they've played in," Carter said.

Living wills would end indecision

The agonizing question is this: when, if ever, should lifesustaining measures be withheld from the permanently unconscious, terminally ill or other incurable people who are unable to relate to life in any meaningful way?

With this question, the stage has been set for a new medical-moral battle which may be as controversial as abortion.

Until just recently, this issue was a private one; limited to physicians and patients or their families.

Several recent decisions though, have exposed this issue, thrusting it into the political realm. Most of the decisions have leaned in favor of the proponents of the right to die movement.

Contrarily, those in the medical community, now more than ever, have the ability to sustain life in many situations which were not possible just a few years ago, presenting us with new problems.

The foremost of these problems regarding force-feeding and the right to die is that medical technology is developing at a much faster rate than the decisions can be made about the impact of such developments.

In addition, there are no definite guidelines regarding when to unplug the cords or pull the tubes. This makes it even more difficult for decisions to be made.

Finally, the thought of death is something not many individuals can talk openly about, particularily their own. By making a living will, the right to live or die becomes a personal rather than professional decision. A living will also gives the family involved the assurance that the wishes of the individual entrapped by advanced medical technology are being carried out.

Fortunately, much of the problem can be eased by public openness about the right to die and by the use of living wills. This, in turn, would make each individual situation much less difficult for all involved.

Insider trading difficult to define

With the recent guilty pleas entered by investment counselors and the firing of Department of Commerce employees, stock market investors have been given reason to question the market's integrity.

The action deemed illegal is called "insider trading," illegal action resulting when "persons learning of big corporate developments such as takeovers, in the course of business or from tips, trade securities on that news while it remains secret," according to U.S. News & World Report.

But increased enforcement is not going to be easy, despite the government's faith in advanced techniques to trace accounts.

Areas to be defined include what would be a "big corporate development," and determining if it is illegal to select stocks based on informal conversation among stockholders or officers of a corporation.

Also, the factualism of the information would have to be determined to avoid regarding rumors as hard information.

Many investment leaders see the main problem with insider trading being the possible undermining of public confidence in the stock market.

But the government must not rush into panic legislation. The absolute halting of insider trading may be a nice goal, but in all practicality that is all it would be.

Treaty signing would limit support

K-State and Manhattan are in a unique position to learn about the conflicts in Central America. Our campus has been one of the few in the nation where Central America has received more attention than the movement for divestiture from South Africa.

Local congressman, Rep. Jim Slattery, has been highly involved in recent debates on aid to the Contras and is a member of the Nicaraguan Task Force of the Democratic Party. Ed Seaton, publisher of the Manhattan Mercury, has many ties with the press and governments in Central America.

"The situation is at a critical stage," Seaton said. The Contadora peace talks have produced a document which may finally lead to a reduction of violence in the region. Contadora is aimed at settling internal and external military and political conflicts between various forces in Guatamala, Honduras, El Salvador, Nicaragua and Costa

According to Seaton and Slattery, confidential sources have reported that Nicaragua will soon announce its decision to sign the treaty. Unfortunately, it appears that El Salvador and Costa Rica may be backing away from the treaty.

The complex document has three general sections. One section calls for specific reductions in military arms for each country (this was the most tedious part to be worked out), and places limits on military maneuvers by foreign forces (e.g. American troops in Hon-

The next section calls for national reconciliation between forces which are currently fighting (this is directed primarily at the governments and rebels of Nicaragua and El Salvador), and the establishment of democratic processes.

The third section calls for establishment verification procedures.

Seaton and John Exdell, professor in philosophy and member of the Manhattan Alliance for Central America, have learned that the Salvadoran government now has reservations about the verification section, because of concern that Nicaragua may not comply. It should be noted that verification would also be very difficult to administer in war-torn El Salvador.

MILLIGAN Guest Columnist

The Costa Rican government appears to be concerned about whether the Nicaraguans will comply with the call for democratiza-

Contadora provides protocols for other countries to sign so that they can declare their support for the treaty. Thus far, the Reagan administration has shown no willingness to sign a protocol, despite its assertions that it supports Contadora.

The treaty calls for the suspension of support for irregular forces such as the U.S.-backed Contras.

Slattery is a big supporter of Contadora. He believes the United States should listen to its allies, who virtually all oppose aid to the Contras. They see the Contras as the main stumbling block to peace in Central America.

Where Slattery differs with many members of MACA is in his belief that Nicaragua is becoming a totalitarian Marxist-Leninist state like Cuba.

This past Saturday when Slattery met with members of MACA and groups from Lawrence and Topeka, the Rev. Don Fallon of the KSU Lutheran Campus Ministry explained that what he saw on his recent trip to Nicaragua and El Salvador showed the more totalitarian state is El Salvador, a U.S. ally.

In Nicaragua, people at all levels participated in debate on the proposed Nicaraguan Constitution. The people felt free to express their views however they chose.

"Going from Nicaragua to El Salvador was like going from the fruit salad to the frying pan," Fallon said. The Salvadorans were frightened. There was a strong sense of intimidation and anxiety. The day after one man spoke with Fallon, his mother "disappeared."

Thursday, the House is expected to vote on more aid to the Contras, even though the United States does not know what happened to $15 million of the last $27 million sent to the Contras. This time, Reagan wants to send $100 million. It is obvious that he wants to escalate the suffering of the Nicaraguan peo-

The last time the question of financing the Contras came up in the House of Representatives, Reagan asserted that if the Contras are not allowed to continue "pressuring" the Sandinistas of Nicaragua to reform, U.S. troops will have to become more directly involved.

Reports from Nicaragua indicate that the Sandinistas are preparing to be invaded. Their stategy appears to be one of preparing for a protracted hit-and-run war in the mountainous regions.

Currently, many people consider an invasion by U.S. troops to be politically infeasible, but the region has been torn by violence and outside powers for hundreds of years. As long as the U.S. government insists on having its way, the region is likely to remain turbulent and any peace is likely to only be tem-

Explosion wounds Israeli postal worker

TEL AVIV, Israel - A small bomb exploded Sunday at a post office in the Mediterranean port city of Ashdod, slightly wounding a postal worker, police said. A police spokesman said the explosives appeared to have been planted by Palestinian guerrillas. Israel army radio said police rounded up 20 Arab suspects for questioning.

The injured woman was released after being given first aid, the spokesman said. Ashdod is 20 miles south of Tel Aviv.

Pope expresses grief over landslide deaths

VATICAN CITY - Pope John Paul II on Sunday expressed his grief over a landslide in Colombia which may have killed as many as 200 people. John Paul is due to make a week-long visit to the South American country starting

The pope referred to the landslide during his noon blessing from his window overlooking St. Peter's Square.

Speaking to about 5,000 tourists and pilgrims, he said, "I share the grief of the stricken families" and asked for prayers for the victims. The landslide crashed across a highway in southern Colombia on Saturday, killing at least 15 people, according to official reports. Witnesses were quoted as saying 200 people may have died.

U.S. attorney general in Rome for talks

ROME — Attorney General Edwin Meese III will head the U.S. delegation at a two-day meeting, opening Monday, of the joint Italian-American working group on narcotics trafficking and organized crime.

Their talks with Italian officials will include the fight against terrorism. Meese arrived in Rome on Sunday. Joining him will be FBI Director William Webster. Interior Minister Oscar Luigi Scalfaro heads the Italian side.

At the last session in Washington on Nov. 13, Meese and Scalfaro announced new efforts to combat terrorism. They discussed ways to share intelligence about terrorists and agreed to treat terrorists as common criminals instead of as political criminals, who are exempted from most extradition treaties.

Bristol-Myers withdraws Excedrin capsules

SEATTLE - The maker of Extra-Strength Excedrin capsules today announced it is pulling all capsule forms of its non-prescription medicines off the market. Meanwhile, authorities said as many as six deaths would be reinvestigated because of two fatal cyanide poisonings and the discovery of three contaminated bottles of the painkiller. Bristol-Myers Co., which withdrew Excedrin capsules from sale Monday, said it also would stop selling capsule forms of its Datril, Comtrex and Bufferin brands. The company, in a statement released in New York City, said it would begin to introduce those products in "caplet" form within the next two weeks.

Gas prices continue to fall for July holiday

LOS ANGELES - Motorists willing to pump their own gasoline are paying less than 90 cents a gallon, and prices will continue to fall this week in an unprecedented pre-Fourth of July plunge, an oil industry analyst said Sunday.

"It is an amazing drop," Dan Lundberg said after tabulating results of his twicemonthly 50-state survey of 17,000 gasoline stations. "It is sort of an Arabian summer in early bloom.' The Lundberg Survey shows the average price of regular leaded gasoline at selfserve pumps, including all taxes, is now 82.95 cents per gallon. Regular unleaded is 88.70 cents per gallon and premium unleaded is 102.50 cents. He notes the average for all self-serve gasoline is 89.75 cents a gallon, while the average price of gasoline at full-serve pumps for all grades is $1.1564.

The 95.61-cent average price for all grades of gasoline will likely decline further, perhaps by 3.4 cents a gallon later this week, because wholesale prices dropped 4.74 ents a gallon in the past few days, he said.

Residents told to avoid creek after spill

JOPLIN, Mo. - Residents were warned to stay away from Turkey Creek in north Joplin after an apparent liquid waste spill from a local plant turned the water slate gray and killed fish and other aquatic life.

A disposal line carrying liquid wastes from the Tamko Asphalt Products plant became clogged Saturday and spilled out of a manhole and into the small stream, prompting the warning by Joplin Health Director J.C. Hounschell.

The Missouri Department of Natural Resources and the state Department of Conservation were investigating the spill.

Gale Roberts, an environmental engineer with the DNR at Springfield, said a homeowner along the creek reported the spill to him Saturday. He said the fish died from oxygen deprivation.

Harold Cox, Tamko's general manager, said the company will investigate to determine what caused the line to become clogged. He declined to elaborate on the spill until after the investigation ends. Roberts said the company could be fined for the fish kill. Any fine would be based on the number of fish killed and expenses incurred by the two investigating state agencies, he said.

'Pilgrims' to join peace march in Omaha

OMAHA, Neb. - Dozens of peace "pilgrims" reportedly will converge on Omaha over the July Fourth weekend to protest what sponsors describe as the immorality of the arms race. 'The Heartland Peace Pilgrimage' is sponsored by women's religious orders in 21

Pilgrimage spokeswoman Beth Preheim of Omaha said participants will walk along four routes in South Dakota, Kansas, Iowa and Nebraska to Omaha, where they will join members of The Great Peace March. The Great Peace March is a transcontinental walk for peace that began earlier this year in California. That march is expected to arrive in Omaha July 3 and re-Spokeswomen said the pilgrimage already has started in Wounded Knee, S.D., and Leavenworth. Participants are expected to leave Columbus, Neb. and Dunlap, Iowa, later this month.

Vaught leaves Wildcat post for new stint

By The Collegian Staff

K-State baseball coach, Gary Vaught, will be leaving the Wildcat baseball team next season to take over the nationally prominent Oral Roberts program.

Vaught met with Oral Roberts officials on Thursday night and accepted the position Friday. Vaught replaces Larry Cochell who guided the Titans for 10 seasons before resigning his position last week because of budget cuts in the Oral Roberts baseball program.

Vaught guided the Wildcats two seasons and led them to the Big Eight post-season playoffs in his first year at the helm. The team fell to a disappointing last place finish in league play this season, however.

"I expect it if our coaches are doing a good job," Athletic Director Larry Travis said of Vaught's leaving. "Coaching is a business, and these guys are trying to move up like everyone else. I have been around this business too long to have this type of thing surprise me."

Travis said a search began Friday to find a replacement for Vaught, who came to K-State from Connors State Community College in Oklahoma, before accepting the Wildcat position two seasons ago.

Travis indicated the University would look nationwide, but primarily "here in the Midwest" for Vaught's replacement. He said he hoped to name a successor by August.

Travis also said the new baseball mentor would not be required to have head coaching experience.

Royals cut off Angels

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Steve Balboni hit a three-run homer and rookie Scott Bankhead pitched seven strong innings Sunday, enabling Kansas City to break a four-game losing skid with a 7-4 victory over the California

Balboni's 14th home run of the season capped a four-run rally in the second inning as the Royals halted California's five-game winning streak.

Bankhead, 3-0, gave up five hits in seven innings. He struck out seven and left after issuing his second walk of the game to start the Reliever Bud Black gave up an RBI single to Reggie Jackson with two outs in the eighth before Dan Quisenberry closed for his eighth save.

Mike Witt, 8-5, took the loss. The Angels, who won the first two games of the weekend series, jumped on the 22-year-old Bankhead for two runs in the first. Ruppert Jones led off with a single and took third on a single by Wally Joyner. After Brian Downing hit an RBI single to left, Joyner went to third on a groundout and scored on Rob Wilfong's sacrifice fly.

George Brett walked leading off the Kansas City second and moved to second on Jorge Orta's single. Frank White singled home Brett and then Balboni hit Witt's next delivery into the left-field bleachers for a 4-2 lead.

Brett doubled in the sixth and scored on White's triple, his 1,500th major-league hit.

California's Jerry Narron hit his first home run since July 4, 1985, leading off the seventh.

Jackson hopes opting for KC doesn't throw him for curve

By The Associated Press

KANSAS CITY, Mo. - Scouts say Bo Jackson has the arm of Roberto Clemente, the power of Mickey Mantle and the speed of Willie Mays.

But those guys could also hit a curveball. Can Bo?

"We believe Bo Jackson can be a superstar in baseball. An absolute superstar," said John Schuerholz, general manager of the Kansas City Royals and a principal in Jackson's generally surprising decision to for-sake football. "We believe Bo can do whatever he puts his mind to."

Putting his mind to football, the 6-foot-1, 220-pounder rushed for more than 1,700 yards at Auburn last fall and won the Heisman Trophy as the nation's No. 1 collegiate football player.

Tampa Bay made him the No. 1 pick in the NFL draft and offered him - one of 10 children from a family of modest means - more than $7 million in guaranteed money.

He signed with the Royals for what the Royals insist is no more than any highly regarded first-round baseball draftee would get - maybe a quarter of a million.

When the Royals gave Jackson a selected him in the fourth round of the June baseball draft, eyebrows rolled skyward.

He is just playing baseball against football the way John Elway did, was the general reaction. Columnists chided the Royals for letting themselves be used. Players joked about it in the clubhouse.

But the jokes turned to expressions of disbelief Saturday morning when Jackson signed with the Royals.

"I made the decision from my heart," he said. "I did what Bo wanted to do."

"He left millions of dollars on the table," said Schuerholz.

A few hours later the heavily muscled young man donned a Royals uniform with No. 16 on the back and stepped into the batting cage. And once again Royals players were slack-jawed. Facing third base coach Mike Ferraro in his first major league batting practice, Jackson knocked five balls over the fence. One landed near the base of the electronic scoreboard in dead centerfield, approximately 460 feet away.

"I've been here 13 years and I've never seen anybody hit one there before," said second baseman Frank

"Very, very impressive," said Hal red-carpet tour of their stadium and McRae, a keen students of hitting. "There is rare talent there. I thought that as a football player he'd be too thickly muscled in the upper body. But he's not. Judging from where he put some of those balls, you'd have to say he has tremendous bat speed."

But Ferraro was merely lobbing fat pitches across the heart of the plate. The question remains - can Bo Jackson hit a major league curveball? True, the righthanded winger hit .401 as a junior at Auburn, but that was his only full year of college baseball.

"Baseball will work out," Jackson says flatly. "I honestly believe if I devote myself to one sport, I will be in there in the thick of things.'

Jackson will not have to deal with major league breaking pitches right away. The plan is to work him out in Royals Stadium for the rest of this week before deciding to which minor league team he will go - probably either the AA Memphis Chicks or the AAA Omaha Royals.

"As far as when he gets to the major leagues - I'm not going to say 30 days, or 60 days, or one year or whatever," Royals manager Dick Howser said. "We'll just let things go their natural course and let things happen the way they should happen."

tests, averaging less than one refinding a school that provides him bound per game. His best effort of with an opportunity for more playing the year came at home against Colorado where he chipped in eight Walker has since signed with points in a reserve role.

Samelson, chairwoman of the subcommittee, said a fundamental problem throughout the study was that Lafene does not record departmental breakdowns of receipts and expenditures. She said this practice made it difficult for the subcommittee to determine exact costs of particular services to students.

Samelson said the subcommittee was "extremely handicapped" during the study because of the limited computer literacy at Lafene. She noted the actual costs of services must be determined before the cost effectiveness can be evaluated.

"We have a very fundamental issue here," she said. "We can't work with students until we know what the exact costs are to Lafene."

She said students need to be aware of the savings they can experience before they are asked to pay more in health fees.

According to the study, the average community charge per day for inpatient care is $295. The recommended increase of $25 still makes the cost of inpatient treatment per day lower at Lafene, with the current cost for one day of care at $75. Sutton said a 100 percent increase in that charge may be excessive, suggesting per-day charges of $100 or $110.

Kitchen services at Lafene are also being terminated. The report requested inpatient meals be provided by the Department of Housing, saving Lafene approximately $27,000 per

Better communication goal for campus police "We studied it (the effect of closing

By MELISSA BAKER Collegian Reporter

In May, six employees of KSU Police Department completed an eight-hour sign language training class, said Chief Charles Beckom. Within a year the entire police staff will take the course, he said.

The goal of this program is better and easier communication with members of the K-State community who have hearing and speech pro-

"There are many Speech and Hearing Center clients as well as students with speech and hearing problems on campus. This can make communication difficult," Beckom

By teaching staff members sign language, communication will be easier and the department can better serve these people, he said.

Another concern of Beckom's is helping people who can only communicate through sign language in an emergency situation. Beckom said there have been several incidents where an officer in this situation could not understand the person and valuable time was lost.

"If the officer knows sign language, it gives him and the victim a great advantage in a crisis situation," Beckom said.

The clerical staff in the police department office will also be included in the classes, Becker said. This is to help them assist people who come into the department and cannot communicate easily.

"In the past we've had to write notes back and forth," Beckom said. 'This was a slow process. By learning sign language the staff can help people more quickly."

Besides the communication abilities gained from the class, Beckom said he has noticed two additional benefits of having the officers learn sign language. A few of the people have become quite proficient at signing and "talk" to people for fun, not just police business, he said.

Another advantage is when two officers need to communicate with each other in a difficult situation on the street. Sign language gives officers the ability to talk without drawing the attention of others, he

The class, offered through the Division of Continuing Education, is taught by Larry and Sharolyn Hamilton. Larry, an employee in Facility Custodial Services, is deaf and communicates with his wife through sign language.

Collegian drop sites alter during summer

By The Collegain Staff

Some Collegian readers may be wondering why they are no longer finding newspapers in the usual drop-off locations around campus. A shortage of copies is not the answer, but a reduction in delivery sites is.

Due to budget concerns, Stu-dent Publications Inc. has cut back on the number of campus delivery sites, said Dave Adams, director of Student Publications. This has been a standard practice in past summer semesters.

We deliver to the buildings where the students are located, because the student fees pay for the publication of the Collegian," Adams said. "We are here as a service to the students."

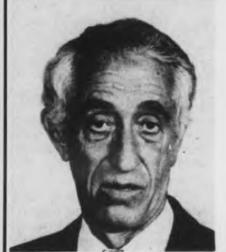

He said copies of the paper are actually more plentiful during the summer. During the regular semester, 15,000 copies are printed for 17,000 students; during the summer semester, more than

7,000 copies are printed for 4,100 students

The Collegian is, as far as Adams knows, the only university paper in the Midwest which is published four times a week - the Collegian is not published on Friday. Many schools, such as the University of Kansas, publish only once a week during the summer term, he said.

The largest number of copies are deposited at the Union and Farrell Library. Other paper delivery sites include Kramer Food Center; Cardwell, Anderson, Bluemont, Waters, Justin and Ackert halls; as well as the Veterinary Medicine Complex.

Adams cautioned people to be careful when picking up a stack of papers to take back to their offices. During the summer, the number of pages of the Collegian varies, and people accustomed to taking a stack of a certain size may find themselves with twice the number of issues needed.

Farm slump forces FmHA to foreclose

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - The federal government's farm lending agency has rapidly increased its inventory of foreclosed or forfeited farmland in the past six years and may take on even more in the coming months, according to government estimates.

The list of more than 4,000 farm properties - comprising an area larger than the state of Rhode Island - has made the Farmers Home Administration one of the nation's largest farm landlords and is costing hundreds of millions of dollars in losses, congressional investigators

And to make matters worse, the agency is leasing much of the land it holds to farmers who then use it to grow crops already in surplus and which the government is paying other farmers not to grow, according to a new report.

In 1979, before the current downturn in farm economic fortunes began, the FmHA held 288 properincreased 14-fold to 4,075 farms comprising 1.2 million acres valued at $709 million.

"FmHA's ownership of farm property ties up a significant amount of government funds and results in increased government management expenses," the General Accounting Office, Congress' investigative arm, the government." Actually, the FmHA has seldom foreclosed in recent years. In the 1983 fiscal year, the agency foreclosed on 356 farms. The next year, that figure dropped to 89 and for the first half of fiscal 1986 foreclosures stood

About half of the properties ended up in the agency's inventory because farmers voluntarily signed them over after realizing they were unable to pay their debts. Another 40 percent came from liquidations forced by other lenders.

But that could change dramatically. Within the next couple of years, the agency could be in the process of kicking thousands of farmers off their land and adding substantially to its farmland inventory. By its own estimate, the agency could hold more than 20,000 farm properties by the end of next year. Often called the government's farm lender of last resort because it serves borrowers who can't get money elsewhere, FmHA began earlier in the year to crack down on $6.4 billion in delinquent accounts. Letters informing borrowers of their plight went to 65,000 of the agency's 270,000 borrowers.

About 23,000 of those got really tough letters, telling them to contact FmHA offices or suffer the consequences. By and large, those were people who have been delinquent in their loan payments for three years

The FmHA says that between 8,000 and 9,000 of those heavily burdened farmers did not bother to respond to the agency notices.

Under the rules, the agency now will "accelerate" collections, meaning that the hard-core delinquents will have to settle up, sell out or be subject to FmHA foreclosure. But foreclosure can take two or three years, a drawn-out legal process that might go on well into 1988 or later.

Adding to the growth in farmland inventory has been the agency's restraint in selling off land. Because ties. By March 31, that number had of depressed and falling farmland values, the agency has held off selling property wherever markets already were glutted to keep from adding further downward pressure to land values.

While the souring of the farm economy has been a major factor, it isn't always to blame for failure of FmHA borrowers, the GAO said. Its public perception that many farmers sonal problems like illness or divorce are losing their land and homes to and excessive FmHA debt were far more likely to be to blame for the farm failures studied.

> When the agency does get around to selling acquired farmland, it is likely to lose substantial amounts of money, the investigators said. In just six states where 1,270 properties were studied, losses likely will total $190 million, the GAO reported. In some cases, the government will lose more through acquiring the land than it was initially owed, according to the report.

> While in inventory, most properties are leased to other farmers, and about 70 percent of properties studied were used to grow crops that receive federal price supports or for which other measures are in effect to reduce surpluses. Those crops include wheat, corn, rice, cotton, peanuts, milk and tobacco.

'Such practices are not in the federal government's best interests," the investigators wrote.

Band members talk of group history

By SHEILA HUTINETT Collegian Reporter

When the topic of discussion is the Manhattan Municipal Band, the first names that come to mind are Charlie Moorman and Larry Norvell

Moorman, a member of the band since it originated in 1920, and Norvell, the director for the last 37 years, are considered a large part of the band's history.

Moorman said the band got its start when a bunch of kids paid a director 25 cents a piece per week to direct them. Today, the Alumni Band has a scholarship in his name.

Moorman, 85, said the scholarship was named after him "because I've lived a long time not because I was good."

Moorman plays xylophone and drums for the band. Each season he performs a solo during the first and He said he never gets tired of direclast concerts. He said having good accompaniment makes solos

"I've just had fun all the way through life, and it's been in music," he said. "I'm not sure if having fun is most important, but it sure is important. The success I've had has been dependent on a lot of other people. I didn't get there by myself.'

For the past 37 years, the band has been directed by Norvell, who was appointed to the position Feb. 7, 1950. He said he plans to stay with the band as long as he is able.

"I've never missed a concert or a rehearsal in 37 years," Norvell said. "As long as I enjoy it, I'll keep ting even though it takes an enormous amount of work.

The 50-piece band practices every Monday night and performs a different concert every Tuesday night during the summer. The variety in careers of the band members are as varied as their ages, which range from a sophomore in high school to Moor-

But not all of the musicians are longtime members of the band.

This is the first summer in the band for Breon Krug, a 22-year-old saxophone player. Krug said his fiance plays for the band and he always wanted to.

Enrique Alcaraz, 33, has played French horn in the band for four seasons

"When I became a full-time K-State student of the music department, I became wellaquainted with the people involved," Alcaraz said.

He said his favorite part of being in the band is playing for the enthusiastic crowds. "People in this town really support this band.' As Norvell looks back over the years, he said he has dozens of favorite things about the band. "I just enjoy it all," he said. "I enjoy working with soloists, and some numbers give me a big thrill when they come off right.' Norvell said he really enjoys the arrangement that is prepared for the Fourth of July. For Independence Day two years ago, some of the band members decorated the bandstand and played "Stars and Stripes Forever" for him.

AIDS victims can be fired for fear of spreading illness

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - An employer can dismiss a person suffering from AIDS merely by voicing fear that the disease will spread in the workplace, without violating a law prohibiting discrimination against the handicapped, the Justice Department has concluded.

An AIDS-infected worker would have no legal resource or avenue of redress under the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 unless the employer used fear of contagion as a pretext to discriminatorily fire, transfer or demote the worker, the Office of Legal Counsel said in a 49-page opi-

Section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act prohibits discrimination on the basis of handicap in any program or activity that receives federal financial assistance.

The opinion made public Monday said that section "simply does not reach decisions based on fear of contagion - whether reasonable or not - so as long as it is not in truth a pretext for discrimination on account of handicap."

The opinion was written by Assistant Attorney General

Charles J. Cooper, who heads the Office of Legal Counsel, a division of the Justice Department.

Jeff Levi, executive director of the National Gay and Lesbian Task Force, which has 7,000 members, said: "The decision seems to be based on politics and fear, not on good law or good public health.

'The Public Health Service says that AIDS is not transmittable through casual contact or in the workplace," Levi said. "The Justice Department clearly raises that specter as a possibility."

Among other things, Cooper's opinion concluded that there is much scientific doubt on how AIDS is spread.

If a person is dismissed from a job or excluded from a federal program solely because he suffers from the effects of AIDS, his dismissal would be illegal - if he is otherwise qualified for the position, said the opinion signed Fri-

But if the person was excluded because of concern by the employer that he would spread the disease, it said on the other hand, the dismissal generally would represent no violation of Section

Acquired Immune Deficiency Syndrome, the virus which attacks the body's immune systems, is spread among male homosexuals during sexual contact, and to intravenous drug users and recipients of blood transfusions. The Public Health Service said recently that by the year 1991, more than 50,000 people a year will be coming down with the disease, for which there is no cure.

The Centers for Disease Control said last November that "the kind of nonsexual person-to-person contact that generally occurs among workers and clients or consumers in the workplace does not pose a risk for transmission.

But in regard to the CDC's conclusions, the Justice Department legal opinion said only "...it has been suggested...that conclusions of this character are too sweeping."

The opinion goes on to cite the views of several researchers who say that it is impossible to rule out the possibility that AIDS is spread by means other than those identified to date.

Government continues restrictions, South African state of emergency newspaper said officials feel unrest

By The Associated Press

JOHANNESBURG, South Africa Prosecutors dropped charges Monday against the last four defendants in a treason case, without explanation.

Sixteen anti-apartheid activists originally were charged in the case, and Monday's action appeared to mark the total collapse of the case.

Michael Imber, Natal attorney general, gave no reason for dropping charges against Thozimile Ggweta, president of the South African Allied Workers Union, and union leaders Sisa Njikaleni, Sam Kikini and Isaac Ngcobo.

They were accused of high treason for allegedy furthering the African National Congress guerrilla campaign against President P.W. Botha's government.

The treason trial began in October in Pietermaritzburg in Natal province. Charges were dropped in November against the 12 other activists arrested in May 1985, including top leaders of the United Democratic Front anti-apartheid

In other actions Monday:

The government said two unexploded land mines were found on A pro-government newspaper emergency imposed June 12 will continue, although tough new security laws have been approved and President Botha is expected to sign them into law this week.

- Newsweek correspondent Richard Manning was told to leave South Africa. He was the second foreign journalist ordered out under the emergency.

- An Anglican priest in a white parish said he faces prosecution if he does not evict blacks who took refuge in his church after their shacks were burned down at the Crossroads squatter camp outside Cape Town.

Two blacks were burned to death by other blacks, raising to 57 the number of people killed since the emergency declaration, the Bureau of Information reported Monday. More than 1,800 people have been killed in nearly two years of racial

The Bureau of Information, the only source of official data under the emergency, said the mines were found Sunday on farm roads in northern Natal and detonated safely by bomb experts. The African National Congress has claimed responsibility previously for planting mines in farming areas of Transvaal Province, north of Natal, that killed several whites and blacks in recent months.

The emergency has imposed unprecedented restrictions on journalists.

The Rev. Geoff Quinlan said by telephone from All Saints Church in a Cape Town suburb that he was given a summons for allegedly violating the law that prohibits blacks from living in white areas. Quinlan said he was given the option of paying a $120 fine by July 11, after proving the approximately 70 blacks had left, or going to trial July

Voting registration sites may increase

By SHELLY WAKEMAN Staff Writer

Voter registration, the city's entrance and consolidation of dispatchers for emergency services highlighted conversation during Monday's intergovernmental meeting.

County, city, and school officials attended the noon-hour meeting at The Cotton Club, 418 Poyntz Ave., to assist the various community governing bodies in communications.

"We meet to keep an open line of communication going between the various officials," said Nancy Denning, city commissioner.

The issue of providing voter registration at locations other than city hall was discussed by Wanda Coder, county clerk. "The city and the county offices both have voter registration, and we always have additional outposts," she said. The alternate locations include several Manhattan locations as well as places outside the city. In the city, voters can register at permanent locations in the Riley County Office Building, 110 Courthouse Plaza, and the City Administration Building, 11th Street and Poyntz Avenue, during regular business

Additional registration outposts are Blue Hills Dutch Maid Grocery, 2309 Tuttle Creek Blvd.; Citizens Bank West, 3049 Anderson Ave.; First National Bank West, 3011 Anderson Ave.; Kansas State Bank West, 1010 Westloop Shopping Center; Kansas State Bank Branch Facility, 11th Street and Bluemont Avenue; Union National Bank West, Westloop; Douglass Community Center, 900 Yuma Street; Manhattan Public Library, Juliette and Poyntz avenues; Dillon's Supermarket, Westloop; and Manhattan High School, Westwood Road and Sunset Avenue.

Citizens have until the close of the business day on July 15 to register. After that, the books for registration will close and will remain closed until Aug. 6.

City Commissioner Gene Klingler told of a concern that was brought to him by local residents. He cited the possible need to place a sign at the beginning of the viaduct upon entry into the city.

It could "inform motorists of their options" of routes to travel, he said. "We knew it was going to be hectic trying to get around downtown with the re-development project."

Also discussed was the Frontage Road paving petition for the Murray Addition near the Manhattan Municipal Airport. The group of officials decided to refer the matter back to the Manhattan Urban Area Planning Board.

The possibility of a consolidated dispatch effort for fire department, ambulance service and police department is also scheduled for study. The officials suggested the study be undertaken due to reports that too many resources are devoted to dispatching, possibly resulting in a duplication of ser-

Designs show beauty, optimism of 'Utopians'

By The Associated Press

NEW YORK - The Shakers retired from the world more than 200 years ago, hoping to create Utopia, but they left instead timeless design for furniture, tools and other common items

The members of the religious sect, who took a vow of celibacy, lived an austere life marked by communal living and hard work. An exhibit of more than 100 examples of the furniture and other crafts, titled 'Shaker Design," has opened at the Whitney Museum of American Art.

"The Shakers, as Utopians, were not materialists, were not consumers, were not interested in having a lot of things," said June Sprigg, guest curator of the exhibit. "They were interested in spirituality. They created a very simple environment for themselves."

A Shaker bench is a simple thing. A carved pine seat rests on four turned legs, and a slat of birch supported by a row of dowels served as the back.

But the dowels are tapered slightly at the top, giving the feeling that the back is floating effortlessly. That same feeling of weightless grace exists in Shaker chairs, stands and tables, a function of the attention the makers paid to the proportions of their designs.

"The most appealing thing about Shaker design is its optimism. Those who would lavish care upon a chair, a basket, a clothes hanger or a wheelbarrow clearly believe that life is worthwhile," Sprigg wrote in the 227-page catalog to the exhibit.

Two Democrats vying for party nomination in commissioner's race

By SHELLY WAKEMAN Staff Writer

Two Manhattan Democrats are seeking the party's nomination for a bid in November's Riley County Commission race.

Seeking to represent residents in the 1st District are Nancy Bammes, Route 3, and Paul Bosch, Route 2, who will vie for the nomination in the

Aug. 5 primary election. The victor of that race will be on the general election ballot Nov. 4 and challenge the only Republican who met the June 10 filing deadline, Wilton Thomas, 1923 Bluestem Ter-

The three candidates are hoping to succeed Rosalys "Rosie" Rieger, a Democrat who is vacating her post after eight years. This year, the 1st District commissioner's seat is the only one subject to re-election.

Bosch, a local businessman, said he is running for the position because he feels it is his civic duty.

"My feeling has always been that someone has to do these kind of things," he said. "I'd like to be of some service to the community, and I have the ability, time and patience to be an effective commissioner."

Bosch said he is welcoming the competition in the primary race. "It makes me that much more effective

'We take so much from the community. I think it is my time to give," he said.

After learning that Rieger would not seek re-election, Bammes, a liquor store owner, decided that now was the time for her to put in a bid for "My primary concern right now is finding a suitable location for a county industrial park," she said. "I'm concerned because there are not very many locations you could put one in. There are so many considerations like highway access, water,

His work with the University included the post of county agricultural agent and a 14-year tenure as an extension specialist in farm management. His bid for the seat marks his first attempt at holding public office

The Riley County Republican Committee and several friends and associates approached Thomas about his running for the soon-to-be vacant post.

"It wasn't a snap judgment thing," he said. "I reflected on the fact that I really enjoy working with people.

"I have a deep-rooted interest in Manhattan from the standpoint of a longtime resident, an agricultural, a University and a military standpoint. I have a very broad-based interest," Thomas said.

"I do feel that as a total community - and given the present economic situation - we have to be careful how we spend the county's money,' he said. "But, I don't want to stand still" in regard to economic develop-

The 1st District consists of the 1st Ward, all of the 2nd Ward except the 5th Precinct which is Pottawatomie County, 3rd Ward of the 5th Precinct, and the 2nd and 5th Precincts of Manhattan Township. Also included is the city of Ogden and Ogden, Ashland and Zeandale townships.

Improvement plan begins

Aggieville looks for business increase

By LORI STEVENS Collegian Reporter

While the turmoil in downtown Manhattan increases, so does business for Aggieville merchants. The Aggieville Merchants Association is taking advantage of downtown construction by going full swing into its improvement plan.

The most visible improvements are the new signs and banners which are decorating Aggieville. The "A+" signs will stay up all year, but the banners will be changed five or six times throughout the year.

S&N Design, 319 N. Fifth St., was approached by the association more than a year ago and came up with the A+ theme. S&N graphic designer Steve Lee said Aggieville has always been identified as a student area.

"We want to go beyond that, yet retain that image too. The A+ means highest grade or first class," Lee said. "Aggieville is a bright fun place to shop and be entertained. The banners with their bright colors represent fun and enjoyment."

A ribbon cutting ceremony was conducted May 21 during the annual Aggieville Barbecue, with Mayor Rick Mann cutting the ribbon to celebrate the new look for the business district.

The Aggieville Improvement Plan was originated in the '70s, but did not begin taking shape until 1980. The original improvement plans, which are now being used, were completed in 1983 by The Design Group of Manhattan, 2700 Amherst Ave.

The funding for the plans came from both the merchants association and the city. Funds for the actual improvement project are coming from the city, the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce and the Aggieville Business Improvement District.

Jim Schottler, president of the merchants association, said there are many objectives to the Aggieville Improvement Plan.

"The district needed organization, especially with increasing competition," Schottler said. "With the change in the drinking age we are losing customers, so we need to improve our image for the general shoppers under 21. And with the downtown turmoil, we need to give Manhattan residents a place to shop while broadening our retail base."

The visible changes are not the only improvements to be made in Aggieville. The less visible changes include checking the traffic flow of both automobile and foot traffic; the installation of underground power lines and storm sewers; and planning streetscapes.

Another improvement scheduled to begin at the end of July is the renovation of Triangle Park. The park renovation is being designed to provide an attractive entrance into Aggieville. Schottler said he hopes the park will be finished by the end of September.

The improvement plan follows a sequence; however, Schottler said there is no actual completion date. Expediency and necessity, along with availability of funds, will determine which improvements will come next, he said.

Lee said, "Aggieville is competing with the mall. It is essential to get its message out before the mall does. Aggieville is trying to convey its message and become the premier shopping area to win out over the competition."

State to review misuse of handicapped rights

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - In an effort to crack down on abuse of handicapped parking, the state Department of Revenue announced Monday holders of handicapped license plates and placards must obtain special identification cards by Oct. 1.

Ken Clark, a spokesman for the Division of Motor Vehicles, said his agency would begin sending letters on July 1 to the 40,000 Kansans who hold special parking privileges for disabled people.

Clark said those people will have 30 days to return a form certifying their need for the privileges along with $1 for the new identification card. Disabled veterans will be exempt from paying the card fee but will have to return the form, he said.

If holders of the handicapped license plates and placards fail to return the forms within 30 days, Clark said the division will mail them another letter in early August, saying they must respond within 60 days or their handicapped privileges will be canceled.

"That will be what it will come down to," Clark said. "They will be under greater scrutiny from police after Oct. 1."

The issuance of the handicapped identification cards was approved by the 1986 Kansas Legislature as a means of cutting down on the number of people who are using handicapped parking places without authorization, Clark said.

Disabled people currently may receive either a permanent handicapped license plate or a placard, which can be transferred from one vehicle to another, in order to be allowed to park in designated handicapped parking places, Clark said. In addition, temporary placards are issued to people who have short-term disabilities, such as broken legs, he

However, a law passed this spring requires that all permanent holders of handicapped privileges be recertified every three years. The law also opened handicapped parking to a wider range of disabilities, including severe visual impairment, emphysema, rheumatism or any other debilitating condition that limits a person's unassisted walking ability to less than 200 feet.

Numbers on the identification cards will correspond to numbers on disabled people's license plates or placards to ensure that handicapped parking privileges are used only by the handicapped person to whom the plate or placard is issued, or by people transporting the holder of the plate or placard, Clark said.

About 40,000 of the 2.3 million vehicles licensed in Kansas have been assigned the handicapped designation, Clark said.

Access improves for handicapped

By SANDY WINTER Collegian Reporter

Thompson Hall will soon be accessible to the handicapped, said Gretchen Holden, chairwoman of the Coordinating Committee for Handicapped Services.

Holden said construction of a wheelchair ramp at the northwest entrance to Thompson will begin soon, at an approximate cost of $4,700.

The need for the project first became apparent last fall because the hall contains the Department of Geology.

"A mobility-impaired student needed to take a geology course,' Holden said. "In the process of trying to relocate the class to some other classroom on campus that was handicapped accessible, we learned, through the geology department, that moving the course would be very impractical, because of the class materials that they use in Thompson."

Normally, when a handicapped student enrolls in a course that is taught in a non-accessible building, they simply relocate the class, she said. In this case, however, moving the class was not convenient. The class was eventually moved to Denison academic programs accessible to the handicapped student, but not necessarily the building.

Sometimes, the inconvenience becomes a problem, and recommendations are made to make the building handicapped accessible, as was the case with Thompson, she said.

The committee functions to maintain a list of modification priorities on an on-going basis. In a case such as Thompson - when it becomes necessary to make a building accessible - the committee files a report with Provost Owen J. Koeppe. After Koeppe has evaluated and approved the report, he makes a recommendation to University Facilities to begin construction planning. Currently, University Facilities is working on making Kedzie Hall handicapped accessible, Holden said. The committee believed the programs located in Kedzie were important enough to make the building available to the handicapped, she said. Kedzie houses the Department of Political Science, the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications, and Student Publications

O'Neill refuses Reagan right to speak

By The Associated Press

WASHINGTON - President Reagan asked Monday to address the House on the eve of its vote on his request for aid to Nicaraguan rebels, but House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. denied the request. saying it would be an "unorthodox procedure," virtually unprecedented in peacetime.

Presidential spokesman Larry Speakes said Reagan was "deeply disappointed" that he would not be accorded the opportunity to make a final appeal for his $100 million aid package, scheduled for a House vote Wednesday.

Speakes said White House chief of staff Donald T. Regan had called O'Neill Monday afternoon to ask if the president might deliver a speech to the chamber Tuesday before leaving for a speech in Las Vegas and a week's vacation at his California ranch.

O'Neill offered the president an opportunity to appear before a joint session of Congress, which he said would be more appropriate. The speaker said that in so doing, he was continuing "my practice of supporting any presidential request to address a joint session of the Congress....I offered President Reagan the opportunity to do so tomorrow (Tuesday), just as I have done upon every such presidential request. .

"I was told by Mr. Reagan that the White House did not want the president to address a joint session, that the White House wants the president to appear before a regular meeting of the House," the statement added. "In 1969, President Nixon appeared sequentially before both Houses on the eve of the Vietnam War protests to thank members for supporting his conduct on the war.'

"Having the president appear before only one House to lobby for a legislative proposal would be un-precedented," O'Neill said. "The only justification for such an unorthodox procedure would be if the president would use the occasion to participate in open dialogue with members of the body. A formal address should properly be made before a joint session.

"My offer for a joint session remains open," he said. "On Wednesday, the House votes on Contra aid for the third time this year. If the House passes Contra aid in any form, the Senate will have to act on the matter. Since future congressional action must occur in both houses, I believe that the proper forum for an address is the traditional joint session."

Presidential addresses to a single house of the Congress are extremely rare. Speakes said his research showed only a half-dozen or so cases in which a president had gone before the House. Most of the cases he cited involved cases in which U.S. troops were in combat.

The House vote on aid to the rebel counter-revolutionaries known as Contras is expected to be very close. Speakes said Monday the White House was still a few votes short of victory. Speakes said O'Neill, a steadfast opponent of Reagan on the issue, declined the president's request in a telephone conversation with Regan, saying he did not want the issue "politicized." The spokesman said he did not know whether that word was O'Neill's or Regan's. Comment from the speaker's office was not immediately available.

Speakes, who had suspended his daily news briefing for reporters in anticipation of announcing the president's speech plan, returned to the podium to announce:

"The president has asked to address the House of Representatives on Tuesday, June 24, on the cause of freedom and democracy in Central America. In the president's view, the way the United States responds to this fundamental challenge will affect the course of U.S. foreign policy for decades to come.

"It is a cause which requires national unity and firm bipartisan support," Speakes' statement said. 'The speaker of the House of Representatives has declined the president's request. The president is deeply disappointed."

Speakes said Reagan hoped O'Neill would reconsider.

Natural gas in Kansas a bargain, report says

By The Associated Press

TOPEKA - Kansans got a bargain on the prices they paid for natural gas during the first quarter of this year, the Kansas Corporation Commission reported Monday.

In its quarterly survey of prices charged by the state's six biggest natural gas distributor systems and comparing them with a national average price, the KCC found that Kansas consumers paid 38 percent less for gas than their counterparts around the rest of the country.

The average price for 10,000 cubic feet of natural gas delivered by one of the six systems to Kansas consumers was $36.43 during January, February and March, the KCC survey showed. That compared with a national average of $58.61 for 10 mcf of gas.

The KCC statement said the prices charged for gas in Kansas during the second quarter, which ends next week, should show a further decrease because of wholesale pice reductions which have been passed along to consumers since May.

However, the state's largest gas distributor, KPL Gas Service, recently received a $15 million rate increase from the KCC which took effect June 15, and that likely will temper reductions next quarter. The $36.43 average price during the first quarter was up 43 cents from the fourth quarter of 1985, but was down 6 percent from the $38.77 during the first quarter of last year. It also was down 28 percent from the $50.75 Kansans paid on average for 10 mcf of gas in March 1983, when natural gas prices peaked. The Kansas average is determined by surveying prices charged by KPL Gas Service on its four main systems, Union Gas and KN Energy.

The Kansas prices ranged from $32.04 on the KPL A system to $39.53 on KPL's East system. The KPL A system has about 110,000 customers in 106 cities, including Manhattan, Abilene, Salina and Great Bend. The KPL East system has about 280,000 customers and includes serving Topeka, Overland Park and Kansas City, Kan.

Presidential hopeful to speak at club

By ANGELA O'HARA Staff Writer

Big business hasn't stopped Pat Paulsen, owner of a northern California winery and contender in the 1988 presidential race, from changing his career as a comedian.

Paulsen will be appearing tonight at Bushwacker's, 531 N. Manhattan Ave., not to promote his recent entrepreneurial endeavors, but to make people laugh. Paulsen is most famous for his regular appearances on "The Smothers Brothers Comedy Hour.'

Two shows are scheduled for tonight. The 9 p.m. show is sold out, but tickets are still available for the 7 p.m. show. Tickets are $4 in advance and $5 at the door.

Because his wine sales have expanded across 30 states, Paulsen said he may produce his own line of salad dressings with "Not For Charity" printed on them.

"I'm a real American," he said. "I'm in it for the money." Paulsen plans to attend the Democratic presidential caucus in Iowa next year. According to the March issue of Harper's magazine, Paulsen has raised $57 for his presidential campaign. With that kind of budget, Paulsen said he isn't planning on campaigning past the Iowa caucus.

"Running for president is expensive," he said. "They (other candidates) have people raising money for them."

The 1988 election will mark Paulsen's second presidential race. In 1972 he vied for a Republican nomination with the slogan: "Can't Stand Pat.'

This year, he said he is running for a spot on the Democratic ticket because there are some great opportunities within the party and more people he can "make fun of."

Paulsen said he expects the same reaction from the Democrats as he got from the Republicans 14 years

"They'll all fight like they did at the Republican caucus," Paulsen said. "Nobody wants to follow (speak after) me.

"If I were president, we'd be a lot better off. I want to be president for the pension plan. That's the only

Paulsen isn't completely caught up with running for president. He said he keeps himself busy with comedy bookings "everywhere from New Orleans to Spokane," movies, and play scheduling at his Cherry County Playhouse in northern Michigan.

Having just completed filming "They Still Call Me Bruce" with comedian Johnny Yune in Houston, Paulsen said he believes the movie will go over better than "Night Patrol" and "Blood Suckers From Outer Space," two recent releases.

"I did 'Blood Suckers' so I'd have something to talk about," Paulsen said. "Like Michael Landon talks about '(I Was A Teenage) Werewolf,' "I do the best I can with what I

Paulsen got his start as a comedian after studying drama for two years at City College in San Fran-

Before graduation, he took off and played in theater groups, trios and finally as a single comedian.

"I don't know if I got a diploma,"

This won't be Paulsen's first trip to Kansas. He was here in 1972 to speak at a football game. He said he also climbed the state's "highest mountain" - Castle Rock, located near Wakeeney.

Despite warnings of "the riotous crowds in Manhattan," Paulsen isn't worried.

"I know how to handle them," he said. "I'll take my money and run." About half of Paulsen's show tonight will be politically oriented humor. The other half vi! include pantomime sketches and guitar

After the show, Paulsen will return to his winery in northern California where he will continue preparations for his July 3 installation as mayor of Asti Village, Calif., with a population

"I just declared myself mayor," he said. "I plan to disband the city council. I don't want any back talk.'

Concert to include music honoring band conductor director of the band and band

By The Collegian Staff

"The Sound of Music" is just one of many numbers to be performed by the Manhattan Municipal Band at 8 tonight on the Arts in the Park stage in City Park.

Vocal soloist Marjean Harshbarger, graduate in music, will perform the title song from the musical, written by Richard Rodgers (of Rodgers and Hammerstein fame). Harshbarger is a music specialist at Fort Riley Elementary School. Another highlight will be "Rondo from the Horn Concerto No. 2," written by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart and featuring French horn soloist Enrique Alcaraz, senior in music.

The theme from the movie "Raiders of the Lost Ark." written by John Williams, will be conducted by Rod Manges, assistant director at Manhattan High

A special event at the concert will be the premiere performance of a new march, "The Larry Norvell March." The number, conducted by its composer Steve Easterday, is a tribute to Norvell who is in his 37th season as the band's director.

Easterday has his bachelor's and master's degrees from K-State. As a graduate assistant in the music department, he arranged and composed for a number of K-State groups, including the K-State Marching

Paul Shull, professor of music, will be the guest conductor on "Funicui, Funicula," written by Luigi Danza. Shull is the director of the Flint Hills Symphony Or-

UPC displays Nagel art in Union; series to include Playboy artwork

By JOLA MURPHY Staff Writer

Nagels, one of the latest obsessions to hit today's younger generation, can be viewed in the Union this week as part of the Union Program Council's Summer Exhibit series.

Patrick Nagel, considered to be one of America's most significant contemporary artists, had a shortlived career until his death in February 1984 at the age of 38. An artist for Playboy magazine, Nagel attempted to recreate the perfect woman as he saw her. Nagel also created the image of Rio on the cover of rock group Duran Duran's "Rio"

"The Nagel woman is a very pale and sterile-looking woman. Her face is very cold and she seems to have the I-dare-you-look about her," said Pat Killian, manager of Strecker Gallery, 332 Poyntz Ave. "Almost all Nagel women have dark hair. They portray a very bold caricature of a woman. Five of the Nagels, displayed by Strecker Gallery, can be seen through July 3 in the Union Second Floor Showcase. Nagel serigraphs (silk-screens) have often been seen in the background of such television shows as "Dynasty" and "Falcon Crest.'

After Nagel's death, 14 commemorative Nagels were issued by the Mirage Co. in his memory. Strecker Gallery has received nine of the commemorative prints. "We have customers who purchase the next print before they've even seen it," Killian said. "We pre-sell Nagels for a specific price."

Killian said most of the gallery's Nagel customers are young men. Prices of Nagels have a broad range. Prints cost between $400 and

Killian said the most popular print is the "Playboy 30th Anniversary" print which is one of the Nagels displayed in the Union. "The Nagel woman is the kind of woman you can see but never touch," said Tony Short, sophomore in marketing and a Nagel investor. "I think the important thing is to buy a Nagel because you like it, not strictly because it's a good investment. Later in Nagel's career, he used the faces of Joan Collins and Brooke Shields to portray his mysterious Strecker Gallery sells Nagel serigraphs, posters and the Nagel book. The book contains nearly all of Nagel's works and submitted biographies about Nagel by Collins, Karl Bornstein and Hugh Hefner.

Killian said buyers of Nagels often check in with the Gallery to see how much the value of their particular Nagel has increased with time.

"These prints are considered very collectible and a great investment at this time," Killian said. "Art styles come and go. This graphic look is popular in art but it may not always be popular. That's the risk the investor takes and we advise them of that when they buy a Nagel. It may not be forever.

Nagels to be displayed in the Union this week will be commemorative Nagels "CN4," "CN7," "Yochum-Kay," "Shades" and "Playboy 30th Anniversary."

The latest Kansas bank closing in Chanute just days ago, appears to be convincing evidence that small banks, not just small agriculturally based banks, are less capable of competing in the financial services industry.

Experts quoted in a Wall Street Journal article go so far as to say that within years a handful of huge banks (institutions with more than $5 billion in assets) will control almost all of the banking industry.

It is becoming obvious that it is not only the bad agricultural economy that is contributing to the failure of small banks. It is much more than that. Big banks competitive more technologically; they can offer more up-to-date services like NOW accounts, delve into complete money management services and cut personnel costs by using computers efficiently.

If small-town banks are to survive, they are going to have to take steps to become more sophisticated technologically, increase their variety of customer services and avoid using interest rates as their major source of in-

House arrest may be home arrest

House arrest is becoming a more feasible alternative for retaining criminals.

The new house arrest system uses a computer to randomly call a prisoner living at home several times a day. The prisoner is asked a few questions, which are record-

If there has been a violation of house arrest probation officers are dispatched to the violator's home.

While this Orwellian-like system may give some individuals the heebie-jeebies - Big Brother is indeed watching - it has significant advantages over the present prison system.

It clears out the prisons to make room for serious offenders. The Bureau of Justice Statistics reported that in 1985 more than 500,000 criminals were being held in already overcrowded prisons. In 1985, prison population grew at 8.4 percent, but prison expansion failed to keep up.

The cost of house arrest is far less than that of running a correctional facility. The manufacturer reports the system can cost as little as $1.67 a day for each prisoner.

Offenders avoid the harsh environment of the prisons which can make some criminals even worse. The system also decreases the odds that officers working in prisons will face riots due to overcrowding.

But like any new system, it is not without its faults. Guidelines to decide which prisoners are eligible for house arrest must be set and adhered to. Also, the system should be revised to make sure the houses do not become centers for illicit activity.

Commercials invade public TV

Since the beginning of public television in 1953, the medium has been forced by law to refrain from accepting advertising or operating commercially. But because of feared losses in revenues from other sources, public TV stations have, for all practical purposes, gone to advertising.

This form of advertising, called enhanced underwriting, originally started as an announcement telling who sponsored the particular program. But the Federal Communications Commision has loosened the rules of what can be said to the point where underwriting has become "soft commercials," according to Bob Fidler, operations director at KTWU in Topeka.

The big question is how far underwriting will go. Many people feel that public television could become the fourth commercial network. If this were to happen, the fear is that programming would be based on the number of viewers rather than educational content. While this funding would help stations stay afloat, the viewers would lose out.

Indications are that underwriting will continue to increase. It is hoped, as public television edges toward accepting paid commercial advertising, the viewers' concerns will not be lost in the shuffle.

Baby on board

The reason we parents have baby stickers on our cars is to warn other drivers that we can be expected to do insane stunts with our vehicles. Some of these stunts include driving the speed limit, slowing down for yellow lights, paying attention to the road, and not weaving in and out of lanes to get to the fire. Maybe if all motorists drove as if they had a baby on board the roads would be safer for all ages. I put my sticker in the top left corner of the rear window and I can see just fine. Harvey Helms, senior in dietetics

Sensitivity needed

It's bad enough when you're in a funeral procession and people driving by don't stop and show the respect due to the family.

It's twice as bad when the person who doesn't stop sticks out like a sore thumb because he is in a state pickup and is recognized as a Kansas State University

I was taught that stopping was automatic. Are we hiring such insensitive people? A little common sense can go a long way. Remember, "do unto others..."
